gles and pairs. In the 1988 Winter Games in Calgary, skaters will compete in singles, pairs and ice dancing;

Ice hockey: named for the French word hoquet meaning "crooked stick". The game was invented in Canada and Canadian teams won five of the first six Olympic gold medals for ice hockey. In 1988 in Calgary, 12 teams will play a total of 46 games to decide the gold medal winner;

Luge: a French word meaning "sleigh". Lugers, lying on their backs and steering only with their shoulders and legs, manoeuvre brakeless, open sleds down a twisty, icy track about 1,200 metres long at speeds up to 150 km/h. Women compete in singles; men in singles and doubles; cross-country ski race. The winner is the competitor with the best combined result;

Ski jumping: competitors soar off 70-metre and 90-metre jumps to earn scores that combine points for both distance and for style;

Speed skating: a total of 10 separate medal events- five for men and five for women. Skaters race two at a time in timed heats around a 400-metre oval. Races range from 500 to 10,000 metres.

Nordic combined: a two-event contest starting with a 70-metre ski jumping competition and concluding with a 15-kilometer
