

Local Scouts get highest honour

Two Terrace Bay teenagers were accorded the highest honour in Canadian Scouting recently when they were presented with the Chief Scout's Award at a ceremony at Thunder Bay.

Darren Anderson, a 13-year-old who has achieved this honour since joining the local scouting movement only two years ago, and 14-year-old Bill Hopper, a 6 year veteran who started as a Beaver, received their awards on June 10.

On behalf of Jeanne Sauve, Governor General and Chief Scout of Canada, His Honour John Wright and His Worship Mayor Jack Masters of the City of Thunder Bay presented the boys with a plaque commemorating their proud achievement.

Recipients of the Chief Scout's Award, instituted in 1973, are judged to exemplify principles of Scouting through leadership, voluntary service to the community and outdoor skills.

Darren and Bill have achieved many of the badges created by the Scout movement to indicate skills and knowledge attained in many fields.

As part of their eligibility requirements for this award, the boys said they donated between two and 1/2 to three hours each week to shovel snow at the Terrace Bay Recreation Centre and to help with maintenance and cleaning.

Dean Main, Terrace Bay recreation coordinator, said the two Scouts donated 50 hours each toward various tasks. "I think it's great," said Main of the boys' initiative to volunteer their time and added that they have contributed "very much."

In addition to their volunteer work at the recreation centre, the boys are assistant leaders with the local Scout troupe.

The two winners of the award said they enjoy doing many exciting things since joining Scouts, particularly "camping everywhere," according to Bill.

The two young leaders say they would like to establish a local Venturers troupe. Venturers are between the ages of 14 and 18, and are usually former Boy Cubs and Scouts.

They said they are trying to get an adult to help start or lead the local group, but judging these young men, they need only minimal guidance and encouragement.

process in which chlorine is substituted by oxygen, thereby reducing the amount of toxic material in effluent and consumer goods. She maintains that the technology is available and ultimately cheaper than processes used in most North American pulp and paper mills.

The Greenpeace mission will also pressure politicians into developing specific programs to combat polluters by citing a U.S.-Canada pact designed to control industrial polluters.

Both countries signed a second Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement in 1978 (the original agreement was signed in 1972). Despite its progressive appearance on paper, it is criticized as a hollow and ineffective agreement. Differences in water quality standards between the affected states and Ontario have led to little coordination and corrective measures.

McLean said the group will testify before a congressional subcommittee in two weeks, where they will try to bring this issue to light.

As for direct action demonstrations, McLean said that they don't always work.

Two days after the Beluga left port in Montreal, two Greenpeace activists scaled the smokestack of an ALCAN-owned aluminum smelter at the headwaters of the Seguenay River. They draped a banner reading "ALCAN/Cancer—Greenpeace." The day after the group spoke to residents of Terrace Bay, two activists draped a sign on a mill stack in Thunder Bay.

"We are oriented to the press," McLean admitted to the Terrace Bay audience, "but sometimes when we do that we shoot ourselves in the foot and the issue gets lost." To many residents of Terrace Bay, however, the issue appears to be quite relevant and important.
