Reading for kids not 'homework'

By Greg Huneault the News

Some students close up their text books on the last day of school and don't open any until the beginning of classes in September. And that's the way they want it to be.

However, for a group of enthusiastic young readers who meet regularly at the Terrace Bay Library, reading books and completing written reports throughout their summer holiday is exciting, educational and fun.

The "Dig In" Summer reading Program is in its fourth year of helping children and teenagers to improve their reading skills and to develop a love of reading and learning as well.

Hosted by Head Librarian Jeanne Marcella, an average group of 20 children between the ages of 8 and 13 years meet every Thursday afternoon to select new books to read for the coming week and to submit reports reviewing the the books they have read during the previous week. They also participate in games dealing with book titles and literature in general.

But doesn't it seem like homework to these children? "No," they say in unison and shake their heads.

"You could enjoy the reading and discover some more books that you never read before," said 'student' Evan Rochon. This week Evan has chosen to read The Celery Stalks at Midnight; it appears to be a mystery book judging by the cover design.

Jeanne said the children have a wide variety of types of literature from which to chose, and their choices reflect their personal tastes.

Bronwen Gemmill, who has chosen to read Munmy's Tomb, confessed that her favourite book is Garfield. "He was funny," she critiqued.

Although the kids are required to read only one book each week, some have been reading almost one book a day.

"I don't know if the parents realize just how much reading their children do," noted Jeanne. "It's not competitive, but the older kids like to compete with each other (and see who can read more)," she added.

Thirty-two children have registered for the program, which began July 7 and runs for eight weeks.

If the reward of reading enjoyment isn't enough, the kids have a year-end party planned. Awards, certificates and goodies will be handed out to those who have completed the program.

Although the party is something to look forward to, these children seem genuinely satisfied with the pleasure they receive from reading.

For young participants like Evan Rochon, this seems to be the best reward of all. Terrace Bay Video cassettes will now be available to the residents of Terrace Bay through their public library, in addition to books tapes, and magazines.

This new service is being made available through a pilot project of the Ontario Ministry of Culture and Communications. The pilot, called the Northern Video resource, is designed to help public libraries in northern Ontario to broaden the range of services they offer to their communities by lending video cassettes in addition to books and tapes.

The program is not intended to compete with commercial video distribution in the community, and for this reason the collection will not contain many 'popular' or current films.

The main emphasis is on educational, cultural, quality children's programming and french language programming as these are not economically viable for commercial rental. This is particularly true in smaller communities.

The initial collection at the Terrace Bay Public Library consists of 50 videocassettes in English (VHS) and 25 in French (beta). The tapes will be available without charge in a manner similar to books.

The collection will be exchanged on a regular basis to ensure that a continuing supply of new, quality video programs are available to library patrons.

This program is funded through the Ontario Library Service - James Bay, which operates the Northern Video resource Pilot Project on behalf of the Ministry of Culture and Communications. The program is coordinated locally by Jeanne Marcella, chief librarian of the Terrace Bay Public Library.
