

Golfers to study proposed local course improvements

Local golfers might be yelling "fore!" as they dodge falling planks inside the club house if improvements aren't made soon.

A recently released development study commissioned by the Aguasabon Golf Club recommends that the club submit funding applications to replace the existing club house and watering system, both of which are in dire need of repair.

These were the two major conclusions of the study, which began after the club secured funding from the Ministry of Tourism and Recreation to examine possible improvements and methods to finance them.

The study will be used as a basis for any further applications.

The nine-hole golf course, established in the late 1950's, has a current membership of 193. It is the only course within a radius of approximately 90 kilometers and services players from smaller communities around Terrace Bay and Schreiber.

The study points out that, although the club house trailers which were donated by Kimberly-Clark have served a useful purpose, "they are not permanent structures and have deteriorated to the point where major renovation works will be required in the near future."

Results also state that several leaks in the roof are causing problems, and space is limited for large gatherings of people.

The watering system used by the club is creating concern also. Kimberly-Clark provided the club with 150 mm pipe for a new iron waterline last fall, but it is still not in service. The study notes that a pressure-reducing valve may be needed because of the steep grade of the water supply system coming from the Township.

The existing waterline has been experiencing low water pressure for years, and only four holes can

Will the Club House be scratched

Members of the Aguasabon Golf Club might enjoy the '19th hole' more if plans for a new club are accepted.

1988-89 Terrace Bay/Schreiber Entertainment Series returns with a sensational showcase

Residents of Terrace Bay, Schreiber and Rosport soon will be enjoying the finest entertainment found anywhere in Canada, and it will be right here. A thrilling program of professional music, drama and dance has been planned for the 1988-89 season, which will provide full evenings of fine entertainment for the whole family.

The program this year promises five engagements of great variety and polished performance. Included in the program are:

Bulava — a Ukrainian dance ensemble. Full of song, these athletic dancers will thrill the audience with their colorful costumes and high-kicking routines.

Cinderella — a special children's presentation sharing the story of Cinderella through the beloved art of puppetry. It will be presented by the Maritime Marionette Company.

Fort William Male Choir — the cherished songs of Christmas will ring through the town as the very popular choir shares the spirit of the special season in early December.

Two concerts in 1989 will showcase acts which are sure to get the audience involved.

CLAZZ — a musical harp and flute duo whose adaptable program will suit all family members.

Quintessence — popularly known as "The Marx Brothers of Strings," this versatile quartet and guitar group combine an uproarious act with great music.

Watch for more information in the coming weeks. A very enthusiastic committee is gearing up to provide a great range of acts this season that are sure to satisfy everyone.
