

Journey for life continues following disruption

By Dave Chmara

Forced to put her "Journey for Life" walk on hold last September following a massive heart attack suffered by her husband, Helen Walsh is now resuming her voyage.

Walsh is walking from St. John's, Nfld., across the country to protest what she calls, "a lifestyle of convenience - the sacrificing of life of the defenseless preborn child."

Walsh resumed her journey where she left off - in Niagara, on a day that she feels is significant to her cause - Mother's Day.

Originally, she had planned to walk to Thunder Bay. Once there she was to decide if she would continue with her journey, based upon the status of the pending political decision concerning legislation on the right to life of the preborn child.

When Walsh stopped in Schreiber Friday, June 16, she said, "I'll be heading to the zero mile point in Vancouver. We still have to protect life."

In order to bring some credibility to what she is doing, Walsh said a sacrifice must be made. Her sacrifice is leaving her family behind in Bedford, N.S. and walking alone across the country.

"Although I have worked for some 16 years for the protection of life, I had never really laid my life down. You have to make a sacrifice in order to speak out about the values of something. I wanted to speak a message that would ring true - that life is really important - so I decided to take part of my life and walk across Canada, meeting my fellow citizens and proclaiming the right to life of the preborn child."

Although she said the journey can be long and lonely, she added, "it's not as hard as being brutally killed with taxpayers money."

Walsh walks from 50 to 60 km each day, except for Sundays. During evenings, she attends rallies and talks about her beliefs.

The message she brings with her is, "Each of us has been given our basic right to life, and it is now our responsibility to safeguard the inalienable right to life of the preborn child, from the very moment of conception, not a potential life but a life with great potential. Let a cry rise from the hearts of the people of this great nation. Let it echo throughout the land."
