The following article is aimed at students and graduating students looking for a summer job or that elusive first full-time job.

The intent is to provide you with some of the basic tools and skills that will help you in obtaining a job. Two areas where most people need assistance in is with their resume and interview skills. The first part of this two part article will deal with the resume.

When applying for any job it is a necessity to include a resume. Your resume if it is prepared well will provide a prospective employer with more valuable information than an application.

Remember that your resume and application will determine whether you are to get an interview. Keeping this in mind, your resume must make a good impression.

There are many ways of laying out your resume, however, all good resumes contain the same basic information.

Personal data should include your name, address and telephone number of your home and work place. Do not include your religious affiliation, Social Insurance Number or other confidential personal id numbers, it is also not necessary to indicate marital status.

Remember that information such as your Social Insurance Number can create serious problems if the wrong people get a hold of it, therefore, keep it secret.

In listing your present and past job experience include the following: employers name and address, Branch of company or government you worked in; your title and classification and the period you worked at that particular job.

Describing your various responsibilities is the difficult task. Do not exaggerate, lie or embellish what you did or the accomplishments you made. Be honest and don't sell yourself short. There's a difference between being descriptive and stretching the truth to the breaking point. A little glamour in the right place can help. Employers are usually able to separate fact from fiction and if you get the job the truth will eventually come out.

You should make note of your education history, special certificates and courses, volunteer work and special interests. This information becomes useful in determining your suitability for the job.

If you have a degree in accounting you will not be qualified to apply for work as a forester. Be reasonable in matching your skills to a particular job.

References are another valuable part of your resume. Potential employers will want to check with past employers to determine your suitability for a job and what your skills are and how you have performed in the past.

Never list your references give them only when they are requested. And always ask if you may use someone as a reference. Failing to do so could result in a poor report or a response such as "I don't know that person well." Getting permission will ensure you receive an honest, positive review of your abilities.

The final step is to write a covering letter to attach to your resume. A covering letter should introduce your application as a resume to an employer. Make reference to the job title you are applying for and any competition number if applicable. Indicate your interest in the job and general qualifications and desire to hear from them in the near future.

If you require more detailed information on putting a resume together contact your nearest Canada Manpower Office or the Ministry of Northern Development and Mines office located at 2 Stevens Avenue, Box 280 Marathon, Ontario P0T 2E0 or call 229-1153. For areas outside of Marathon ask your operator for Zenith 33160.
