Local tourism undeveloped

By Dave Chmara

Despite undeveloped local resources and relatively little promotion of them, tourism is a $3 million industry for Terrace Bay.

This was the finding of Lehman & Associates, a consulting group preparing a Tourism Development Strategy for Terrace Bay.

Bob Lehman presented his findings to the Tourism Development Committee, local business operators, and the public on Thursday, July 13.

Mike Moore, chairman of the Tourism Development Committee, said Terrace Bay council realized in late 1986, after the Kimberly-Clark lay offs, that "the area needed to diversify its economy base."

The idea of opening a tourism information centre came about and in order to receive government funding a study had to be performed - the study which is currently underway by Lehman & Associates.

Lehman said the study is not finalized yet because he wanted the business community and public's input as to the objectives, findings, recommendations and proposed sites for the tourism information centre.

He added another study currently taking place, the Waterfront Development Study, parallels the tourism study and some of the findings of the Waterfront study will be incorporated into the tourism report.

Because the highway is the only mode of transportation in which tourists pass through town, Lehman said ideas must be developed to get people to stop in town.

Hotel accommodations of 77 units are somewhat limited in the summer, said Lehman, but local campgrounds, which offer about 400 sites, play a strong role in the accommodation sector.

"There's a good variety of food, beverage and retail businesses," said Lehman. "The attractions are good too but they are not developed or promoted. Signs don't really promote or attract tourists although their marketing and promotion is adequate for the current level of facilities."

Some of the natural environment which Lehman mentioned should be developed are the beach, falls and the gorge.

He added the recreation facilities are excellent and municipal (financial) support is very good commenting on the two studies currently underway.

There are approximately 100,000 tourists what stay overnight in the area between the months of May and November.

Lehman said the $3 million they spend, which is money all brought in from the outside, is a healthy amount of cash.

"You have far and away the best area between Sault Ste. Marie and Thunder Bay to attract tourists," said Lehman, commenting on Terrace Bay's natural beauty and cleanliness.

Some businesses which Lehman mentioned might take advantage of the tourists are a sporting goods store, fruit and vegetable stand, gift shop and waterfront related developments.

But before the private sector invests in the area, Lehman said the public sector must make the first investment. He said the resulting increase in tourism will lead to more money coming into town and then to private investment.

"The market must be demonstrated before private investment occurs," he said.

To develop this market, more first time visitors must be attracted to the area and their length of stay should be increased.

Recommendations

The recommendations made to the Tourism Development Committee included both short and long term plans.

First, an organization for pursuing the recommendations should be established. A tourism information centre should be built and other steps such as picnic areas, a playground, observation deck, craft shop, and starting to develop the beach and gorge should be begun.

The next phase would be to continue improvements to the beach and gorge, develop promotional material and to encourage a health club concept for the recreation centre.

A survey is suggested to take place in three years to monitor and possibly modify the direction of tourism development. As well, the community's awareness of the benefits of tourism should be increased.

Following this, Terrace Bay should be developed as a destination point - a place where people plan to go - instead of somewhere they just happen to stop on their way to some other vacation spot.

Several locations were looked at for a tourist information centre. Of the half-a-dozen or so places examined, the one best suited is by the Recreation Centre. Lehman said he is optimistic construction of the information centre will begin next year.

Following the presentation by Lehman, those in attendance discussed the proposals along with other ideas - such as increased promotion of the golf course.

It was generally agreed that because the first phase is usually public investment, if the public shows no or little support for tourism development it will make it more difficult for council to pursue tourism development as they respond to the needs and wants of the people.

Lehman said the tourism development committee, along with businesses and individuals, should approach council to voice their support and commitment towards tourism development in Terrace Bay.
