buckle under to $53 fine

This coming month of October, all police forces in Ontario have been given a directive from the Director of Transportation, Regulation Development Branch, to more strictly enforce the seat belt law.

In an effort to increase seat belt use, and to inform the public, the News will be printing weekly stories during the month of October concerning injuries, myths, the law, child safety seats, and proper seat belt use.

Ontario, the first province to enact a seat belt law, now falls behind all other provinces in seat belt usage.

In 1988, according to a Transport Canada annual survey, 70 per cent of Ontarians regularly used their seat belts. This falls short of the 76 per cent national average and ranks Ontario eighth among all other provinces in usage.

People can learn about seat belt use from family, police, driver education programs, their car owner's manual, the Driver's Handbook, Ministry of Transportation materials and, when involved in an accident, many learn from experience.

Through the correct use of seat belts, research has shown the the risk of serious injury or death to a front seat occupant is reduced by 40 to 50 per cent.

If seat belt use in Ontario was to increase by 10 per cent, there is the potential to save 80 lives and prevent 1,320 serious injuries every year.

This would translate into a significant saving in societal costs involved in caring for the victims and their families.

On average, hospital costs are doubled for the non-seat belt wearer compared to an accident victim who was buckled up.

In Ontario, statistics show that, in 1987, an unbelted driver involved in an accident was 21 times more likely to be killed and eight times more likely to be hospitalized than a driver who wore his seat belt.

Motor vehicle crashes on and off the job are the leading cause of disabling injuries or accidental deaths in the 15 to 44 age group society's prime working years. Out of every 1,000 employees, about nine will be injured every year as vehicle occupants and, on average each employee will miss 16 days of working time during the year.

Some people choose not to wear seat belts for a wide variety of reasons: inconvenience, eating, looks, clothing, discomfort, mood, or because others are not wearing their belts.

Others do not fully understand the benefits of seat belts. Driving is mainly routine and many trips arc made when there is no obvious need for protection, such as in town. Some people believe crashes are either so serious nothing could help, or so minor, precautions are pointless.

However, seat belts may mean the difference between serious and minimal injury and allow the vehicle occupant to walk away from the accident site.
