Ears are sensitive part of your pet

By Alice Scott

Have you ever had an ear ache? If you have then you will remember the intense pain. If you haven't, then picture a toothache in your ear and you will know what the pain is like.

Your pet is highly susceptible to getting ear problems if you do not take precautions.

Check for redness, discharge or foreign matter in the ear canals. If your pet tilts his head, shakes his head excessively or constantly rubs his face on the floor or couch, then he may have an ear problem.

Ear infections may occur because of ear mites, bacteria and fungus.

If you see any of these symptoms call your vet. Your pet may need to see the vet for an ear suction and cleaning.

Don't feed or give him water, he may have to have a mild anesthetic to make the removal of substances more comfortable.

Never try to remove anything from the inside of your dog or cat's ear.

Dogs with long droopy ears such as spaniels and setters, are particularly susceptible to infection. Their large ears prevent air from drying their ear canals.

Preventive care will reduce problems. Every few weeks, check each of your pet's ears for wax or dirt build up.

Gently remove any accumulation with a cotton pad moistened with hydrogen peroxide. Ear cleaning solutions are available from your vet but check with your vet before applying any product inside the ear canals of your pet.

WRAP up this week

Increasing numbers of Canadians will no longer tolerate the degrading effects of obscenity on their families, children, neighborhoods and business districts.

This is the message that will dramatically be delivered to law enforcement and elected officials across the country for a solid week.

This campaign, called "White Ribbon Against Porn" is to say that we care and we count in our displeasure of all types of pornography in our communities and to raise public consciousness.

The WRAP campaign provides an easy and attractive way to strike a blow against a very ugly industry. Anyone can be involved with very little effort. It is a way to encourage our elected officials and law enforcement to keep up the battle against pornography across Canada.

Every citizen, business owner, and public official is asked to wear a white ribbon the week of October 29 to Nov. 5 to show their solidarity against pornography.

Buy a ribbon 2 3/4 inches by 18 inches or use a white piece of plastic.

WRAP your vehicle antenna, business window, home window and yourself and send a white ribbon with a brief explanation to your government official.

This campaign is sponsored by Canadians for Decency and the Catholic Women's League of Canada.

is extended to all officials and taxpayers who supported our dilemma concerning bussing.

Our appeal was shockingly denied a second time.

We are still pursuing this matter.
