

Winnie's Scribbles

By Winnie Campbell

Despite the very poor weather conditions the St. Andrews United Church Women held their Annual Christmas Bazaar and tea in the Legion Hall on Dec. 2.

The members are very appreciative to all who braved the weather and attended the event which, it turned out, was surprisingly successful.

Gwen Hadley, treasurer, attended the door and the various members worked at the Bake table, the bazaar table of a great assortment of knitted goods and crafts, and the raffles.

The tea tables were attractively set with the Christmas motif and the ladies served the patrons turkey patties and salad plates with a variety of dainties for dessert. The kitchen brigade were kept busy with the food for the patrons and the outgoing plates.

Prizes were won as follows:

Toys - Cheryl Glad and Margaret Smith.

Childs Wagon - Betty Anne McKenna

Hooked mat - Myra Smilsky
Christmas Cakes - Yola Cebrario and Betha Miller

Christmas Tree - Ambrose McGrath

Door Prize - Rita Scott
General Convenor was the president, Ruth Hiller who thanks all who attended, donated, and worked.

Ontario's millions spend over $1 billion annually on wildlife related activities

Ontario residents continue to show high levels of interest and participation in wildlife activities as well as strong support for wildlife conservation, according to the 1987 National Survey on the Importance of Wildlife to Canadians.

The survey results were released today by Ontario Natural Resources Minister Lyn McLeod and Environment Canada Minister Lucien Bouchard at the annual meeting of federal and provincial wildlife ministers in Quebec City.

According to the survey, more than 6.8 million Ontarians spent $1.6 billion in 1987 on wildlife-related activities.

"We will be analyzing the valuable data from the survey to better understand the social and economic demands on the wildlife in our province," McLeod said. "Ontario remains committed to managing our wildlife resources in a sustainable way."

The survey was conducted by Statistics Canada and sponsored by the federal and 10 provincial government wildlife agencies.

For the survey, close to 80,000 Canadians over the age of 15 were given a questionnaire on their wildlife-related activities during 1987. More than 55,000 people responded, 16,000 of whom were Ontario residents.

Most people participated in indirect wildlife activities, including watching wildlife films, reading wildlife books or visiting zoos or natural history museums. Others participated in such activities as photographing and feeding wildlife or contributing to wildlife conservation groups. Hunting, recreational fishing and trapping small mammals were also included in the activities reported in the survey.

Major findings for Ontario in the report include:

- More than 85 per cent of Ontarians believe that maintaining abundant wildlife and protecting endangered species is important.

- More than 70 per cent of Ontarians participate in non-consumptive wildlife activities around their homes or cottages, including feeding, watching, photographing or studying wildlife.

- Participants spend nearly $1 billion to watch, photograph, study or feed wildlife around their homes or on trips or outings.

- Approximately six per cent of Ontarians hunt wildlife, and hunters spend $314 million. Nearly all resident hunters also engage in other wildlife activities, contributing a similar amount of money to the provincial economy.

- Nearly 28 per cent of Ontario residents spend an average of 17 days recreational fishing.

- Approximately one per cent of Ontarians trap small mammals, mainly for food or fur, income and property protection.

The 1987 survey is modelled on a similar survey taken in 1981. Comparison of the two reports confirms the growing popularity of wildlife activities across the country.

Data from this survey will be used for further studies both within the provinces and nationwide. A national report examining the economic impact of wildlife-related activities is expected by next fall, and another examining trends in wildlife-related activities will follow.
