Pet Talk

Praise...Games...Treats

By Alice Scott

A dog is a pack animal. He must have a leader. You are that leader. He equates love with respect. He is a much happier dog when he knows exactly what is expected of him. By your training you are developing the habits that will stand by him for a lifetime and will make owning him a pleasure for both of you.

Be positive in your training, not negative.

A dog learns by two things only- pleasure and displeasure. Make all the displeasure appear to come from him, not you. Make all the pleasure come from you. (Praise, games, treats, etc.)

In order for your dog to be obedient, he must be under control at all times, and this control can only be established by the dog being on a loose lead. The minute your dog is on a tight lead he is putting the onus on you to control him. Make him work on a loose lead in every situation. Make him responsible for his own actions.

Owning a dog is a responsibility. Your attitude toward the training can make it fun (for both of you) or a chore that you feel as necessary because you own a dog.

Using the correct commands is one of the first steps to teaching obedience.

Keep all commands short. Use only one command. A dog finds it much easier to understand one word, rather than several put together.

Use words such as "sit", "down", "stand", "stay", "come", and "heel." Only "come" and "heel" are preceded by a dog's name. These two commands are movement commands, so you need to use the dog's name to get his undivided attention.

The timing of your commands, corrections, and quality of praise are very important to your dog and determine the quickness and happiness of his response.
