Pet Talk- Obtaining Canadian Championship

By Alice Scott
How does a dog obtain his Canadian Championship?

Not every dog is a potential show dog and very few turn out to be a Best in Show winner.

A dog is judged by how it conforms to the Canadian Kennel Club standard for its breed. I own and show Labrador Retrievers but I have also shown other breeds.

To become a champion a dog must accumulate ten points under at least three different judges. No dog is allowed more than five points towards their championship at each show.

When a judge examines my dog, a Labrador, he is looking for a strongly built, short coupled, very active dog.

He should be fairly wide over the loins, and strong and muscular in the hind quarters. The coat should be close, short, dense, and free from feather.

The head should be wide with a slight stop i.e. the brow should be slightly pronounced, so that the skull is not absolutely in a straight line with the nose. This is just part of what a judge would look for. Each breed has a different standard.

Thunder Bay area has four shows a year lasting three days. Each day is a completely new show and the loser the day before could land up with a Best in Show the next day.

Like most sports there are some politics. Very often a novice exhibitor will become frustrated when a professional handler keeps getting the points, but if you have a dog worth showing then persistence is the name of the game.

Dog shows give everyone an opportunity to see all the different breeds of dogs available in Canada. You can see for yourself the temperaments, ability to train, size and looks of the breed you would like to own.

Before I close I would like to remind everyone to please check their pets chains and collars. Any dog that is tied up outside should have a nylon or leather collar.

Never tie a dog up using a choke collar. They should be checked periodically to make sure they have not broken their chain.

A few dogs have been killed by cars in the past month, and one dog strangled after his chain broke and became caught in some brush.

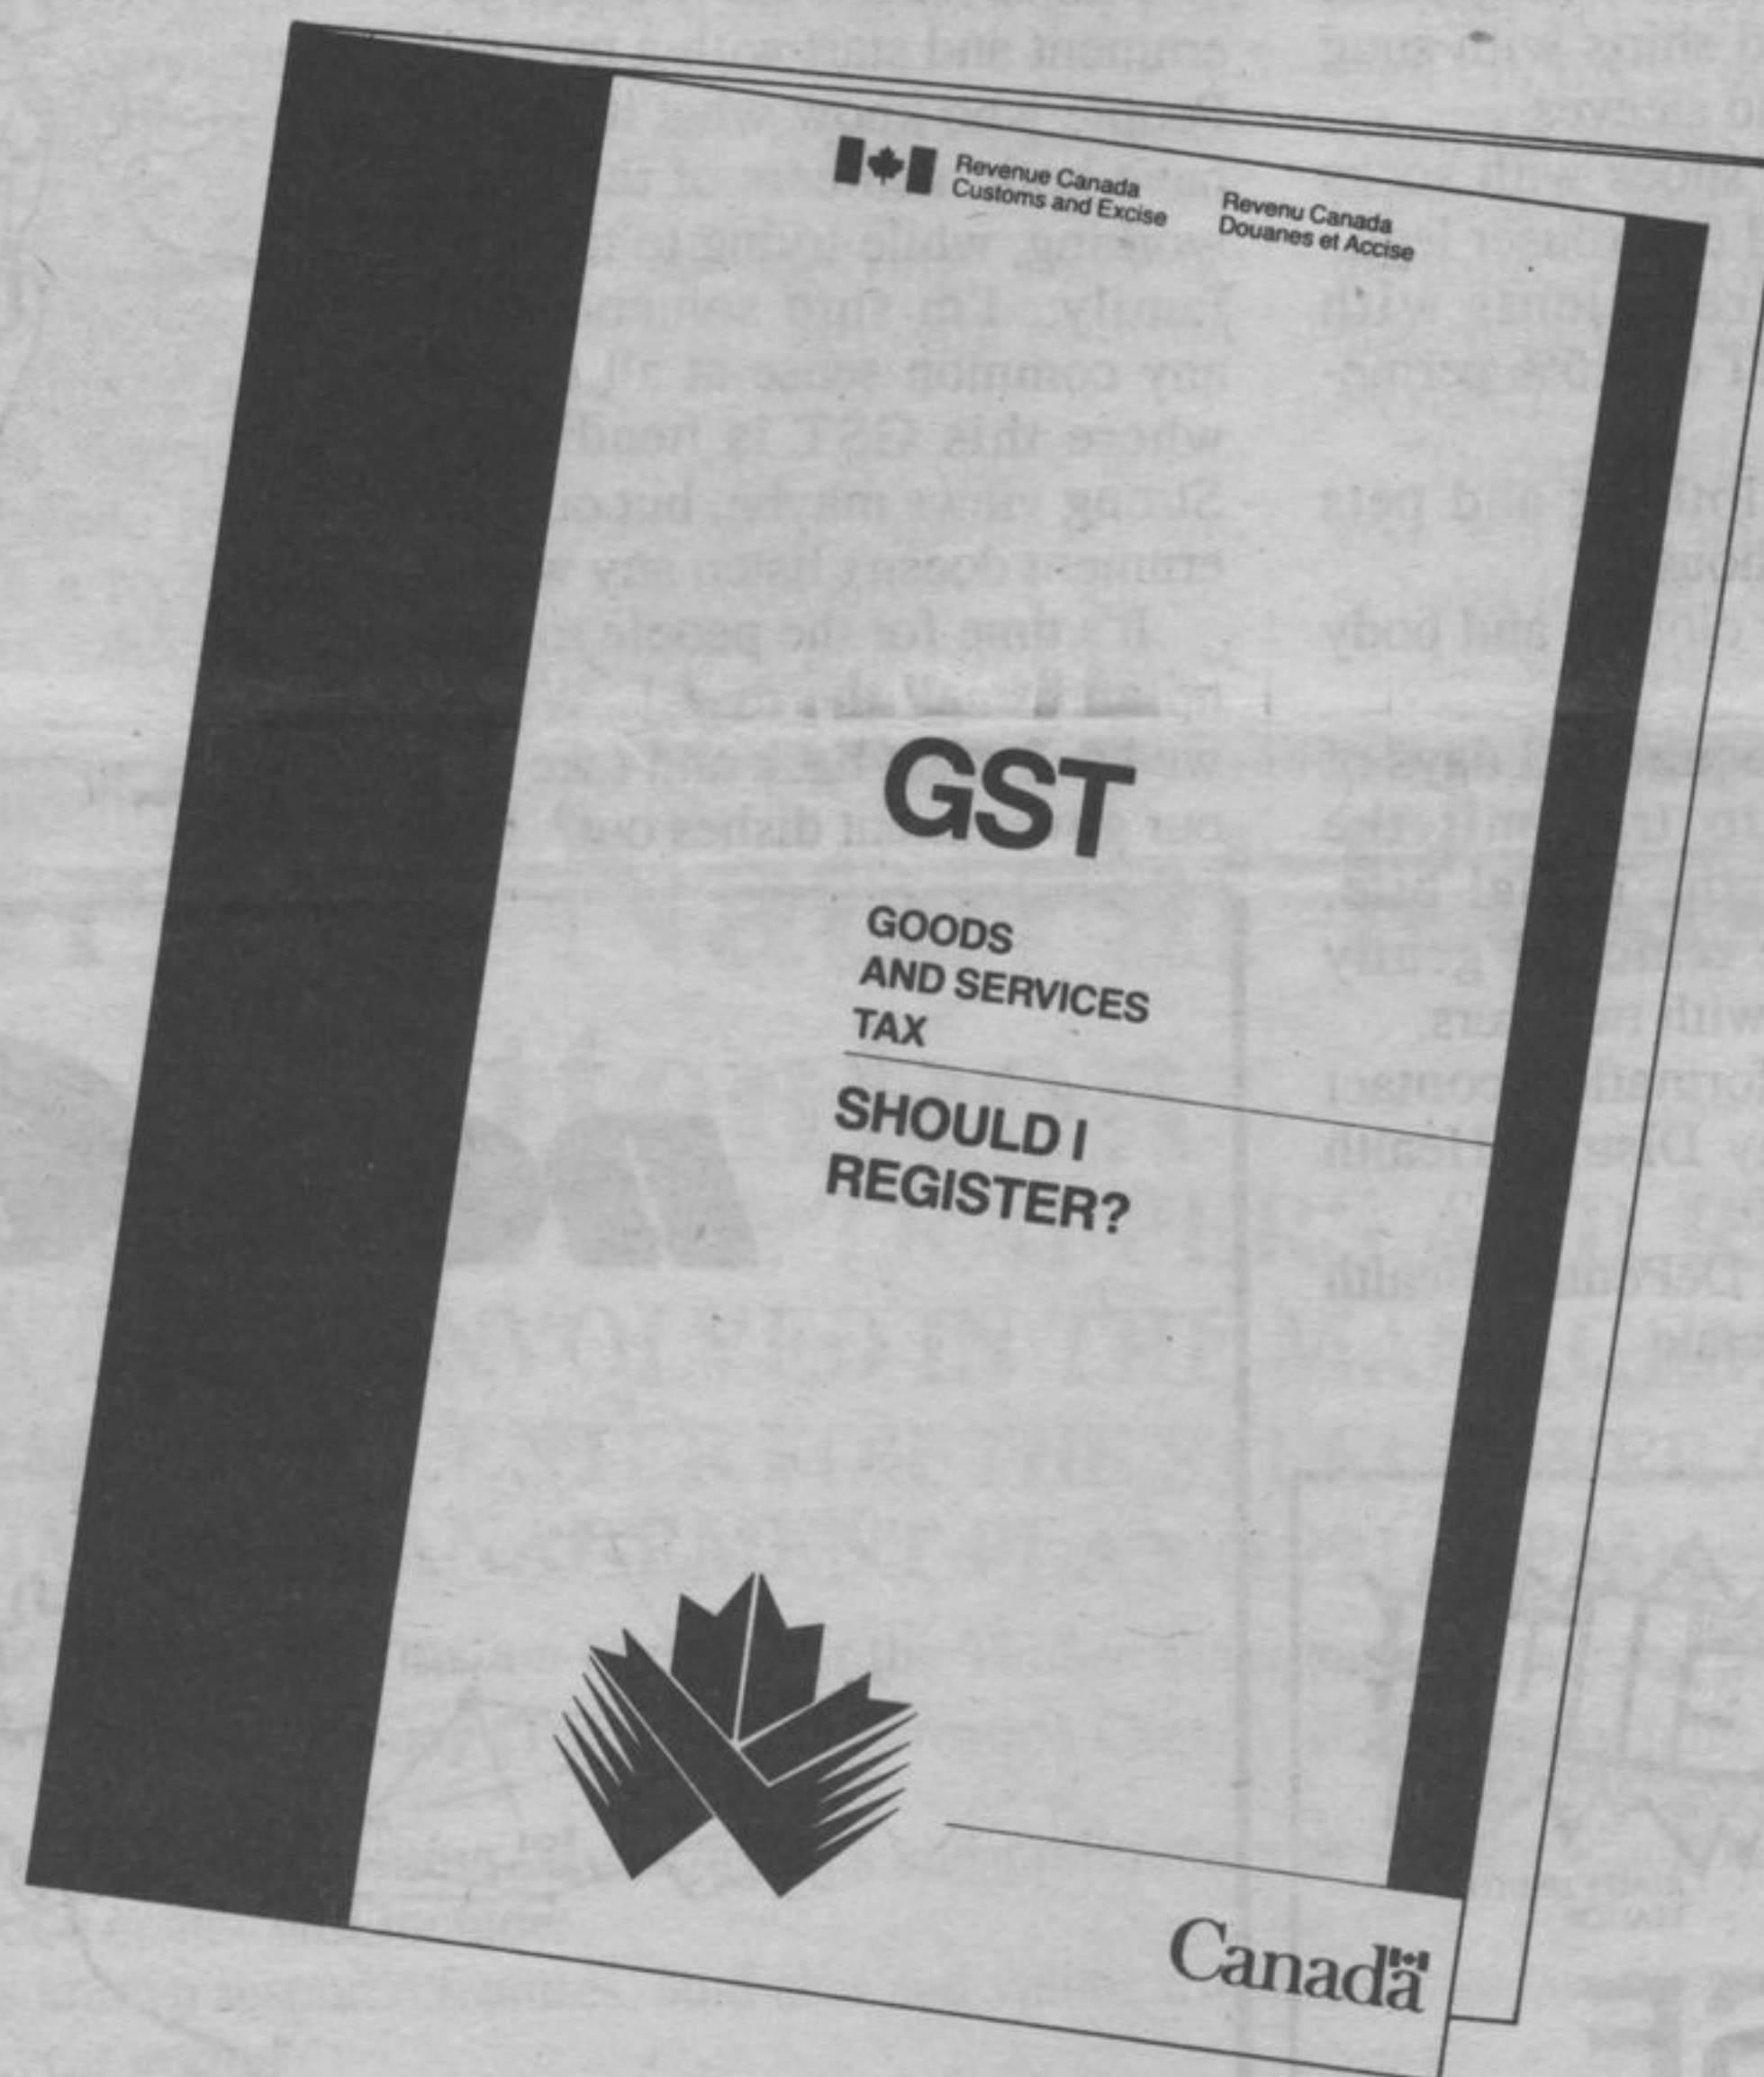

The best solution is to build or purchase a dog run for you pet. If you must tie him use clothesline since it is stronger than chain.
