Increased deer populations will allow the province to open some new deer hunting seasons and lengthen others in 1990, Natural Resources Minister Lyn McLeod announced today.

Five years of research by MNR now are yielding detailed information on deer feeding habits, migration patterns and mortality, in addition to a method for accurately measuring the natural food supply.

"As a result, our wildlife managers are using these data to establish much more reliable population targets in deer management areas," Mrs. McLeod said. "Ontario's deer population has tripled since the ministry established its selective harvest program 10 years ago."

The ministry's management plan is to keep the deer population just below the maximum capacity of the winter habitat to support them throughout most of the deer range. This sustains the health of the animals and avoids dramatic changes in deer numbers and the problems associated with overpopulation, such as vegetation damage and weakened animals. Methods for achieving this include regulating sport hunting, managing deer habitat, controlling poaching and managing predators.

Last year deer numbers were high across the province and they remain high again this year. Although winter came early this year, with cold temperatures and deep snow as early as November in much of central Ontario, an early thaw and milder winter conditions were favorable for the deer population.

For the 1990 deer hunting season, new muzzle-loading gun seasons have been added in wildlife management units 8 and 82, in addition to a new bow season in unit 47. Unit 8 has an earlier gun season this year. The seasons have been extended to five days in units 76, 77, 78A, 78B, 81, 90, 91 and 92.

Hunters are advised that deer licenses, which are required to hunt antlerless deer, will be available in early June. Hunters wishing to apply must return completed application to an MNR district office no later than 5:00 p.m., Tuesday, July 31.

Applications to hunt in controlled areas must be returned to the MNR district office that corresponds to the hunter's first choice of wildlife by 5:00 p.m. Friday, August 31, 1990. Hunters who have failed to return their 1989 mandatory report are ineligible for a 1990 controlled deer hunt tag.

The 1990-91 Hunting Regulations Summary, which will be available in early summer, outlines hunting seasons for all areas of the province. It can be obtained at any MNR district office.

Wild strawberry season

A few local women were out picking wild strawberries near Terrace Bay last Tuesday.

Pat McIntyre and Mireille Clark were filling their buckets just east of the Aguasabon bridge. Mireille stated, "I've been picking wild strawberries for 2 years. It was my grandmother who started me on this."

"Every year I pick about 4 pints but I don't think I'll get that much this year," said Mireille.

Northern Ontario has many wild berries to choose from including blueberries, gooseberries, raspberries, and of course strawberries.

The wild strawberries are much smaller than the store variety, being about as big as a fingernail.

Pam said, "We hope to make jam if we get enough."
