

Carolyn's Critique

This is really four separate movies. Christina Raines, Emilio Estavas, Moon Zappa, Bill Jacoby and Richard Mauser star, randomly, in one of the four.

Chapter one is called Terror in Topanga. An escaped mental patient is loose in the canyon and he is killing people at random.

Lisa, a young wife, mother and heavy smoker knows about the killer but figures she will be safe.

After all she's only going to the market for a pack of cigarettes.

I won't tell you what happens next but believe me it's enough to make you quit smoking.

Chapter two is called The Bishop of Battle, and stars a very young Emilio Estavas and Billy Jacoby. Estavas plays J.J., a video junky obsessed with a game by the same name as the title.

He lets his school and home life deteriorate to the point of no return. He lives his whole life to beat the machine and reach the elusive level 12.

By the end of the story J.J. has learned that old truth, "be careful what you wish for -- you might get it."

Chapter three is called The Benediction. A priest in Mexico has lost his faith and tells the Bishop he must leave the church as he can no longer distinguish between good and evil.

He packs up his belongings and as he is getting into his car takes a full bucket of water in case of radiator failure.

Remember, this water has already been blessed and was meant for the church.

As he drives down the highway, he encounters a big black truck that seems determined to kill him.

It chases him and runs him off the road. When the the ground beneath the truck rises up and breaks open, the priest realizes that there is more to this than an Auto Club reject.

Does the priest get away? Is this truck evil? Does the priest get his faith back?

All I'll say is remember the the water.

Chapter four is called Night of the Rat. As I have an intense aversion to rats I didn't watch this chapter. You are on your own here.

Nightmares gives you four for the price of one. All have interesting twist endings and thought provoking plots.

I enjoyed it and give it and 8.
