

Pet Talk

Your pet and winter

by Alice Scott

Winter is just around the corner, so now is the time to prepare for your pet's needs. The decision to have an indoor dog should be made in September to November. A half and half routine (nights inside and days outside) is more difficult than a complete outdoor or indoor life. Without enough time to develop a good winter coat, your dog cannot cope with the stress of winter temperatures.

Young puppies, older dogs, toy breeds or short-coated dogs such as a Doberman - are not suited to be outdoor pets. They should only go out when necessary, to relieve themselves or to the car, when the temperature drops below -10 celsius.

Salt, snow and ice can be tough on tender foot pads, so check their feet often.

Housing should be given top priority when you have an outdoor dog. The house should be dry insulated and of the appropriate size.

It should be large enough to allow the dog to turn around and stand. If the house is too large, it will cause the dog to lose important body heat.

Use straw or cedar chips to help give your dog an extra factor of insulation, if there is no other type of insulation.

Your pet's diet should also be changed during these cold days. If the dog is always outside, it may need 70 to 100 per cent, more nourishment than in the summer, to maintain proper weight.

You might want to add warm broth, or hot oatmeal to your dog's food just to give him something extra warm to eat.

Try to give your pet a high fat quality food during these months or add corn oil to his food.

Unfrozen water is particularly important at all times, since cold air is very dry and can cause dehydration.

Your dog can have a safe and comfortable winter if you give him the proper care.

In Appreciation

We wish to express our sincere appreciation to the local Darts Association co-sponsored by the Royal Canadian Legion, Schreiber for the benefit tournament held in Marty's honour on November 3, 1990. Our Grateful Thanks to the organizers and to all who helped in any way, to the business firms who donated prizes, donations, and music for the occasion. To the many participants from far and near - some had never thrown a dart before in their lives but gave it a good try anyway! to all the people who donated money to the jars, lists, brought cards and money to our home. To our family, friends, clergy for their ever ongoing support here and in Ottawa.
