Northern Insights

into account the closure of Abitibi-Price's Thunder Bay division mill, and the massive downsizing that will likely result from the rescue of the Kimberly-Clark mill in Kapuskasing.

Other mills are openly wondering about their longevity, or looking for new owners, including: the Domtar mills in Thunder Bay, and the Kimberly-Clark mill in Terrace Bay.

The study concludes, as I do, that the pulp and paper plants that will be still be around in five or ten years are those which:

- *make more use of recycled fibre and faster growing hardwoods to produce paper products

- *are prepared to invest in the latest technology and efficient production methods, even at the expense of jobs in the short term

- *are owned by large, well-capitalized firms seriously committed to remaining as part of the Northern Ontario economic landscape over the long term, and thus make investment decisions not focused exclusively on immediate bottom-line problems, but rather on visionary prospects for an environmentally-friendly paper industry in an information-based economy.
