Former resident visits Africa

"While they lack basic necessities, I could see the richness of their culture."

A former Terrace Bay woman has had an eye-opening experience in Africa.

"Now that I have met Africa's poorest people, I can see the world more realistically," says Brittan Fell, 18, who now lives in New Glasgow, N.S.

"While many lack the basic necessities of life, I could still see the richness of the culture."

As two of Canada's top fundraisers in World Vision Canada's 1991 30-hour famine, Brittan and 16-year-old Dana Grant, of Unionville, Ont., gained the opportunity to witness some of the world's suffering firsthand. The experience changed both their lives.

"I've gained a lot of pride for our country, because of the quality of life we have in Canada. But in Africa their strong faith and pride in their country enables them to survive," says Brittan.

Brittan raised $664 — the most money collected by a Nova Scotia high school student — when she took part in the 30-hour famine in February. She joined forces with 100,000 people across Canada who went hungry for 30 hours and raised $1.8 million.

The money will be used to improve living conditions for the world's poor, such as the Somali refugees who Brittan met in a Kenyan camp.

"World Vision doesn't just give people food," she said. "It helps them make their own food. I thought it was incredible. World Vision gets in and gets to know people. It gives them ideas and helps them develop."

Brittan and Dana competed in an essay-writing contest with eight other provincial finalists. The grand prize — two plane tickets — enabled them to spend 17 days touring operations in Kenya, including a Somali refugee camp, a Masai development project and a child sponsorship project.

Brittan returned to Nova Scotia, and is starting her first year at the Nova Scotia School of Art and Design.
