Program involves parents in their children's education

by Darren MacDonald
The News

A new parent/teacher initiative at St. Martin School in Terrace Bay aims at maximizing parents' involvement in their children's schooling.

"It involves them (parents) in the social and emotional side of their children's education," said St. Martin principal Diane Aitchison.

Each class at the school has a "parent contact" whom teachers can contact when they want help in organizing extra-curricular activities.

The activities can include fundraisers, helping out student council, or helping with special events, such as an upcoming Halloween dance on Oct. 26.

The parents are kept informed about what's happening at the school through a newsletter the school sends them.

Aitchison said parents approached her in late August to see if she was interested in starting the program.

"I would've approached them if they hadn't approached me," said Aitchison, who has been involved with similar programs in other schools.

About 40 parents turned out

St. Martin principal Diane Aitchison.

for an organizing meeting in late September, a turn out Aitchison said she is pleased with.

By spreading out the responsibility for the emotional and social development of the children to include parents, she said teachers will have more time to concentrate on the academic side of education.

Nancy Baxter, one of the parent contacts, said the program can help children build self esteem by having their parents directly involved in school activities.

"It provides a little extra care for the kids," she said. "And I think it helps them to see other adults besides the teachers and their parents."

Aitchison said she hopes to eventually expand the contacts to include senior citizens.

"I think it would be good for the kids to have more contact with older people."
