Twenty-two people, aged 11 and up, have graduated from a babysitting course at the Terrace Bay Recreation Centre.

The Babysitting Course, put on at the Terrace Bay Recreation Centre and sponsored by the Terrace Bay Police, teaches young people how to become responsible babysitters.

The course teaches children about the rights and responsibilities of babysitting, and how to encourage the growth and development of children between the ages of zero to 10.

Guest speakers from the Police and Fire Departments gave the students safety tips.

They also received a talk from a mother and child (this time, Judy St. Don and her daughter Catherine), to give the students an idea of how a mother wants them to care for the child they are babysitting.

The students also received basic first aid instruction, and were taught what to do in case of an emergency.

Proper types of play when babysitting a healthy or sick child is covered, as is what to do when a child misbehaves when they're in charge.

To pass the course, the students had to pass a final examination which grilled them on the practical knowledge they had learned while in the classroom.
