A crowd of more than 200 turned out for the North Shore Community Band's Christmas Concert Dec. 12.

flashing lights.

The first performer was the grade nine music class, who played five numbers, including a flute solo by Nancy Garon.

know who it was going to be when the programme was printed," Alexander said.

The School Choir followed Chapman, and their version of "Carol of the Bells" went over particularly well, and marked the end of the first part of the programme.

The Community Choir opened the second half of the concert. During one song, the choir literally held their noses in an attempt to come up with a specific sound.

The Mass Choir, which Alexander said held their first rehearsal during the intermission, came out next to sing "The Virgin Mary had a Baby Boy."

Then the Show Choir came on to sing two numbers, before the North Shore Community Band returned to finish the show.

After performing four numbers, they were joined onstage by a choir, who led a procession up the aisle carrying candles.

The evening ended with both groups performing Christmas Carols.

In addition to the North Shore band, concert goers were treated to performances by the Woodwind Ensemble, the Brass Ensemble, the grade 9 music class, the School Choir, the Community Choir, the Mass Choir, and the Show Choir.

"As usual, I have a little something extra for the concert," Lake Superior High School Music Director Howard Alexander told the crowd as he took the stage.

Alexander came out dressed in his "Christmas tie", which consisted of a red bow tie surrounded by four red and green munity Band came on, and opened with "Dr. Rock" by Ralph Gingery.

The piece was highlighted by a series of drum solos. Drummer Russel Andrews, who was said to have had his hat "surgically removed" from his head prior to the performance, wowed the crowd with the solos.

After three more numbers by the band, the next performance was an electronic solo by Jason Chapman, who was listed in the programme as a "mystery performer".
