prone to over-correction, with the pendulum swinging too far the other way.

We tried to indicate that that just might happen in a dim and distant future, in a galaxy far away . . . I hope it will be more of a 50-50 thing."

Both plays paint portraits about the playwrights' desired values for society. The young people are debunking materialism, and calling for quality in a world full of cheapness. The COPA play calls for ethical treatment of the elderly and true equality between the sexes.

Both portraits call for quality and equality in human relations — values that should not be ignored as the R.O.C. moves into this new year of instability and decision.
