and bad. At the moment, Credit Unions have millions of dollars of what's called "liquidity" (cash that's not being loaned out to individuals) because of the recession, yet they lack the lending expertise to get into substantial

A creative partnership of business and government expertise with Credit Union dollars might go a long way towards financing worthwhile redevelopment efforts.

These are only four modest examples which I believe are in tune with what you were really trying to get across last Tuesday night.

Yours sincerely,

Possible penalties for erecting an illegal building include charging back rent (if it can be determined how long the building has been up), a $5,000 fine, and the costs to the MNR for destroying the building.

"But we don't really want to stress enforcement," he says. "We want people to enjoy crown land, but we do want them to use it responsibly."
