Energy audits

A representative from a consulting firm hired by Ontario Hydro conducted energy audits on buildings in Terrace Bay last week.

Javid Ahmad said that although Terrace Bay was his first northern project, buildings he's done in southern Ontario have seen an average of 20-30 per cent improvement in their energy efficiency as a result of the audits.

Ahmad takes readings from the lighting, heating and process equipment, and then feeds the information into a computer.

The computer then processes the information and recommends ways to improve the building's efficiency.

Municipal buildings, including the recreation centre, were all audited by Ahmad.

Winners from Holy Angels School (top) are Sheena Figliomeni, J.K., Rosa Carlino, S.K., Shane Miller, grade 1, Darryl Morris, grade 2, Jasmine Paradis, grade 2, Lisa Bourguignon, grade 3, Amy Legault, grade 5, and Philip Figliomeni, grade 6.

Library Librarian Teresa Stortini and Diane Linstead of the Adult Learning Program.

Entries were judged on the basis of how much imagination and originality the student put into the submission.

"How could you pay your bills if you couldn't read them?" asked Richard Leblanc, a grade 5 student at Schreiber Public School, in his entry. Fourth grader David O'Kane takes it one step further: "Not to read is like not breathing."

Six grader Natalie MacKenzie wrote that she "would feel stupid if someone always had to always read my magazines or books . . . better to do it myself."

"If you thought of yourself as stupid (because you couldn't read), you wouldn't have very much self confidence," wrote Wendy Morrison, who's in grade seven. "And confidence is what you need to survive."

Erika Morris, grade eight, pointed out that people who can't read are "smarter in their own ways."

"(They) learn to use different senses and to cope in a world of literacy."

Amy Legault, who's in grade five at Holy Angels, wrote that she would be "frightened when my doctor prescribed me pills and I couldn't read the amount to take," while sixth grader Philip Figliomeni wrote that if he couldn't read, he wouldn't be able "to read my grandchildren bedtime stories. I would feel like I'm not part of this world."

Judging was done by Schreiber Town Office Staff, Schreiber Post Office Staff, Don and Pat Beno of Beno Insurance, and Donna Mikeluk of the Outreach Program.

"We wanted to make it a community effort," Diane Linstead said.

"And they say they enjoy doing the judging."
