Basic Elements combined music, dance and sculpture

Students and staff participate in Basic Element's activities last week

by Marvin Fulton and Darren MacDonald The News

Music classes at Lake Superior High School, and grade 8 classes from Schreiber and Terrace Bay Public Schools, participated in unique music and dance workshops last week.

Basic Elements, made up of performance artists Janice Pomer and Barry Prophet, engaged students in a number of activities.

They included making hanging xylophones from copper tubing, string, and wooden mallets the students fashioned themselves; and making wind chimes made from reeds, snare wire and washers.

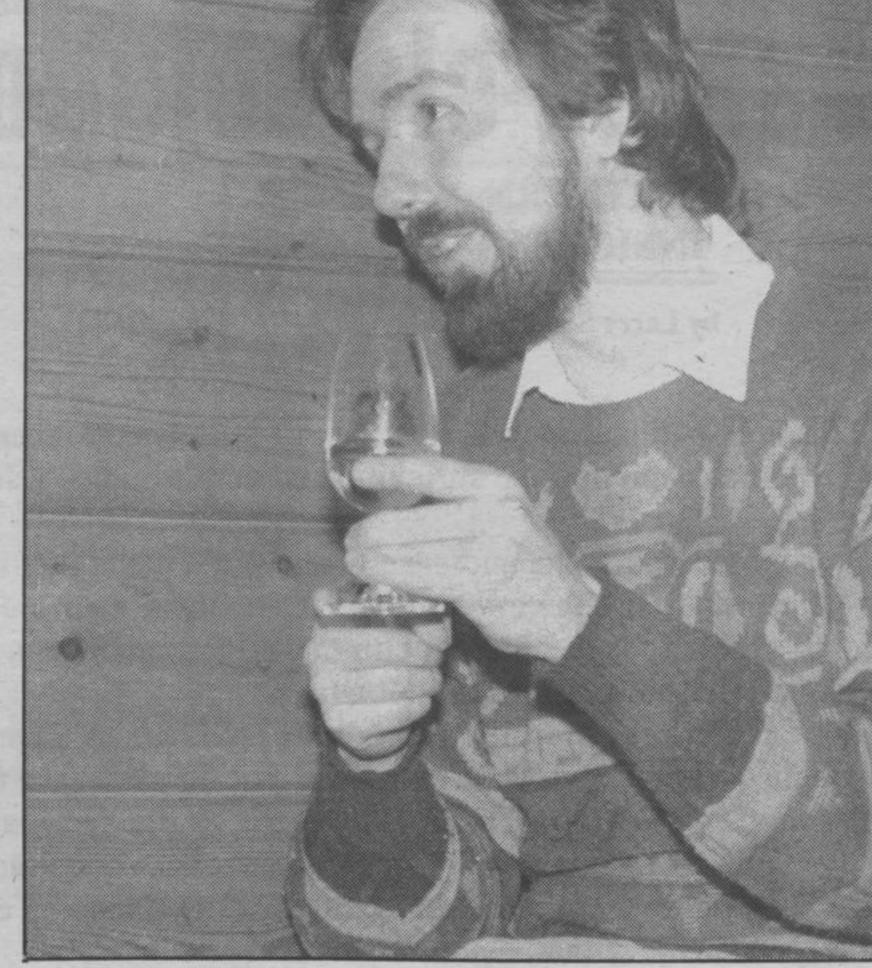

In other activities, one student was tangled up in an elastic spider's web, while the others tried to prevent the student from escaping; students struck bamboo sticks against the floor to make a drum beat; and they played the tops of crystal glasses and swung plastic hoses in the air to create a unique symphony.

The centrepiece of the show, however, is the glass box. Standing five feet, six inches off the ground, the box was invented by Barry Prophet in 1987. Using mallets made out of yarn, Prophet strikes different pieces of rectangularshaped glass which hang from the top of the box. Each rectangle has its own shape and plays a different note.

The box made its debut at the Ontario Science Centre, and has since accompanied Basic Elements on tours across Ontario and the U.S.

Aside from schools, Pomer and Prophet appear in art galleries, museums, festival and universities.

Northern Insights

Retraining and relocation initiatives are important and necessary, but still late and after the fact.

Young has a right to feel bitter. He devoted so much to his crusade he came close to personal bankruptcy two years ago. He told Gzowski he has been able to survive personally by working as a private consultant.

He stopped short of explaining whether the Canadian Association of Single-Industry Towns has any chance of being revived.

Given the declining budgets of most municipalities, of most municipalities, it seems unlikely that locally-based economic development committees will be able to afford paying for a national organization destined to waste a lot of money tilting at windmills.

I share Young's pessimism about the immediate future of northern single-industry towns.

Lacking a national strategy, we seem destined to
