

New members being sought for Ontario council on women's issues

For the first time in its 19-year history, the Ontario Advisory Council on Women's Issues is seeking new members through nominations from the public.

"The public nomination process is a key part of the Council's new mandate," said Women's Issues Minister Mari-on Boyd.

"That mandate, which emphasizes regional outreach and activity, will mean more women participate and more women get heard."

A community-oriented mandate, a public nomination process and a grassroots membership are among the leading recommendations heard by the Council during its province-wide consultations with women last fall. These consultations were launched to find ways of improving communications between women and the Ontario government.

With three members from the northwest, three from the northeast, and two from each of the southwest, central, east and Metro Toronto areas, the membership will reflect Ontario's diversity as widely as possible.

Individuals or groups within each region will nominate 14 of the 15 candidates, helping to ensure a representative and locally sensitive council. Only the chair will be selected through the usual appointment process—by the premier in consultation with the Minister.

All 15 members are to be given a three-year term and eligibility for one reappointment.

Boyd said that having Council members nominated by and working closely with the women in their region will result in "practical advice from people who have real-life experiences and who know their own issues."
