Jump rope for heart

Students at Terrace Bay Public School managed to raise $5,338.78 through their "Jump Rope for Heart" campaign.

This unique program promotes physical education and cardiovascular health, while raising funds for the Ontario Heart Foundation.

Physical Fitness is important to all of us in helping to develop and maintain a healthy heart and cardiovascular system. Jump Rope for Heart is an excellent activity to improve agility and cardiovascular fitness levels for those who participate.

Prior to the event, students solicited pledges for two hours of jumping. Then they were broken up into teams of 3-6 students, and took turns jumping.

Woodrow Ellsworth secured the most pledges, while the class with the most pledges was Mr. Jowitt's grade five class.

The top fundraisers for each class were: Kyle Brend, grade three; Aimee Capy, grade four; Bryan Tremblay, grade five; Josh Papineau, grade six; Woodrow Ellsworth, grade seven; and Shannon MoQuin, grade eight.

problems and delays with paperwork and having to wait a few weeks for answers—things like that."

Before, when decisions were made locally, Glad says loan approval or rejection could be made usually within one or two days.

"With commercial lending going to Thunder Bay, it makes it much more difficult than just being able to go next door," she says.

But CIBC spokesperson Joe Barbera says that the Thunder

Bay office can more than handle the volume of New Venture loans in Schreiber and Terrace Bay.

"If we were making 17 New Venture loans a month out of the Terrace Bay branch, it might have made a difference," says Barbera. "But 17 in two years? That's just not a big undertaking for us."

"If we can't have someone from Thunder Bay come down there at least once a month to service the needs with appointments with people, and if our branch manager can't take the information and pass it on—and we have an overnight courier system within the bank—then we shouldn't be in business."

"Nothing is being taken away," says CIBC District Manager Mike Thomas. "Service will probably improve rather than diminish."

Thomas says that CIBC has been moving toward using specialists to service different kinds of customer needs for a long time, and centralizing commercial accounts in Thunder Bay is part of that process.

"A few years ago, a bank manager could basically offer all the services the bank has," says Thomas. "But because of the competitive nature of the business we're in, our customer needs consistently increase. So we've had to leave the job of looking after our commercial clients to specialists."

Thomas says that specialists can't be placed in every branch, so they have to be centralized where most of the business is. In this case, that's Thunder Bay.

"These accounts aren't being centralized in Winnipeg
