

Hanley brothers have successful year of hockey

by Darren MacDonald
The News

It's been quite a year for Terrace Bay natives Tim and Pat Hanley—hockey-wise anyway.

Tim, 22, played defense for the Lake Superior State University Lakers, who took home the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) championship this year, downing Wisconsin University 5-3 in the elimination round final.

In addition to the championship, he was voted Freshman of the Year by his teammates, beating out eight other first year players.

The team also received a congratulations proclamation from the state of Michigan in recognition of their championship.

Not to be outdone, Pat, 20, played both forward and defense for the Centennial Cup Champion Thunder Bay Flyers, and will be joining his older brother in the Central Collegiate Hockey Association next year on a scholarship to Miami University team, which plays hockey in Ohio.

"If we're both playing defense, we probably won't run into each other," says Tim, who tallied three goals and seven assists for the Lakers this year, and was a plus 14 in the 36 regular season games.

"But if we do, I'll get the best of him," jokes Pat, who scored 14 goals and 40 points for the Flyers this year.

Both of them started out playing minor hockey in Terrace Bay, and moved on to play in Thunder before returning to play for the Schreiber Northstars.

After that Tim played for the Flyers before heading out west to play junior hockey in New Westminster, B.C., and North Battleford, Sask. And last year he received a scholarship to Lake Superior State University, where he's studying accounting.

Meanwhile Pat headed out to Flinn Flonn, Man., to play—which he describes as a "good learning experience" —before landing in New Westminster as well.

He's spent the last two years with the Flyers, which he describes as "one of the best scouted teams in North America." He'll be studying business at Miami University.

In terms of style, Tim says he plays a much different game than Pat.

"I'm more calm and relaxed out there," says Tim. "I play a more steady game."

"I'm a little feisty I guess—I get pretty involved in the game," says Pat, who also says his involvement has led to a lot of penalty minutes.

Although he's not an enforcer-type player, he says he does enjoy the physical part of the game.

Both players say they have ambitions to play in the NHL.

"Oh yeah, I'm sure that everybody does," says Tim, who, at 22, could sign on with a team as a free agent.

Finishing their education is also important to them, but it's something that's less of a problem for Tim.

"I can get a general business degree by the end of next year," he says, adding that he could finish his studies after hockey if he were to sign in the NHL.

"If someone offered big bucks," he might be lured out of school, says Pat. "But it would have to be well worth it (for him to quit school.)"

As they look for summer jobs and continue training for next year, Pat and Tim agree on who'll take home Lord Stanley's cup this year: the Chicago Blackhawks.
