Pet Talk by Alice Scott

Cockatiels can have great appeal as pets

by Alice Scott

If dogs and cats don't appeal to you as a pet, then why not try a "cockatiel"?

These little birds are one of the most affectionate birds available today. They are not shy and love to be with humans. They are relatively inexpensive, easily fed and tamed, and have the ability to learn how to talk.

Many people are fascinated by parrots because they can talk. But they are also very demanding birds and take special handling.

Cockatiels, on the other hand, are small and not quite as demanding on your time.

Recently I was visiting a friend who owned a cockatiel and this little bird captured my heart. They are comical and even enjoy a stranger in their home.

They come in an array of colours, from grey with white and yellow, to yellow, pied, cinnamon and pearl.

The main expense is buying the bird cage, but once you have it, the cockatiels only require feed and treats.

These birds are excellent pets for senior citizens. Seniors love to have the company of a pet, but need one that's easy to care for and isn't too active.

They're available from our local pet store, so the next time you want a pet, consider a cockatiel.
