small hydro projects in the north represent an ideal opportunity for First Nations people to get involved in a resource development right in their own backyard. Conwest recognizes that involving First Nations peoples through the process is a key ingredient for success."

But the Chief has also learned how to negotiate, 10 per cent won't be enough next time, but he's unlikely to get 100 per cent control either, unless he has extra millions around to pay the huge construction costs. Even if Michano gains 50 per cent con-rol of the next project, he will have moved his people well on the road to self-sufficiency—putting some economic foundation to the abstraction called "native self-government."
