

Echoes of Bible Bill from Alberta

than that, we'll have to endure another round of public consultations, keep hearing about it in television newscasts, and keep reading about it in annoying newspaper editorials.

The longer this has gone on, the more complicated and unwieldy it has become. And yet despite facts to the contrary, the leader of the Reform Party would have Canadians believe that we can just shut our eyes, vote 'no' and all of these problems will disappear for five years. Yeah, right Preston. Whatever you say.

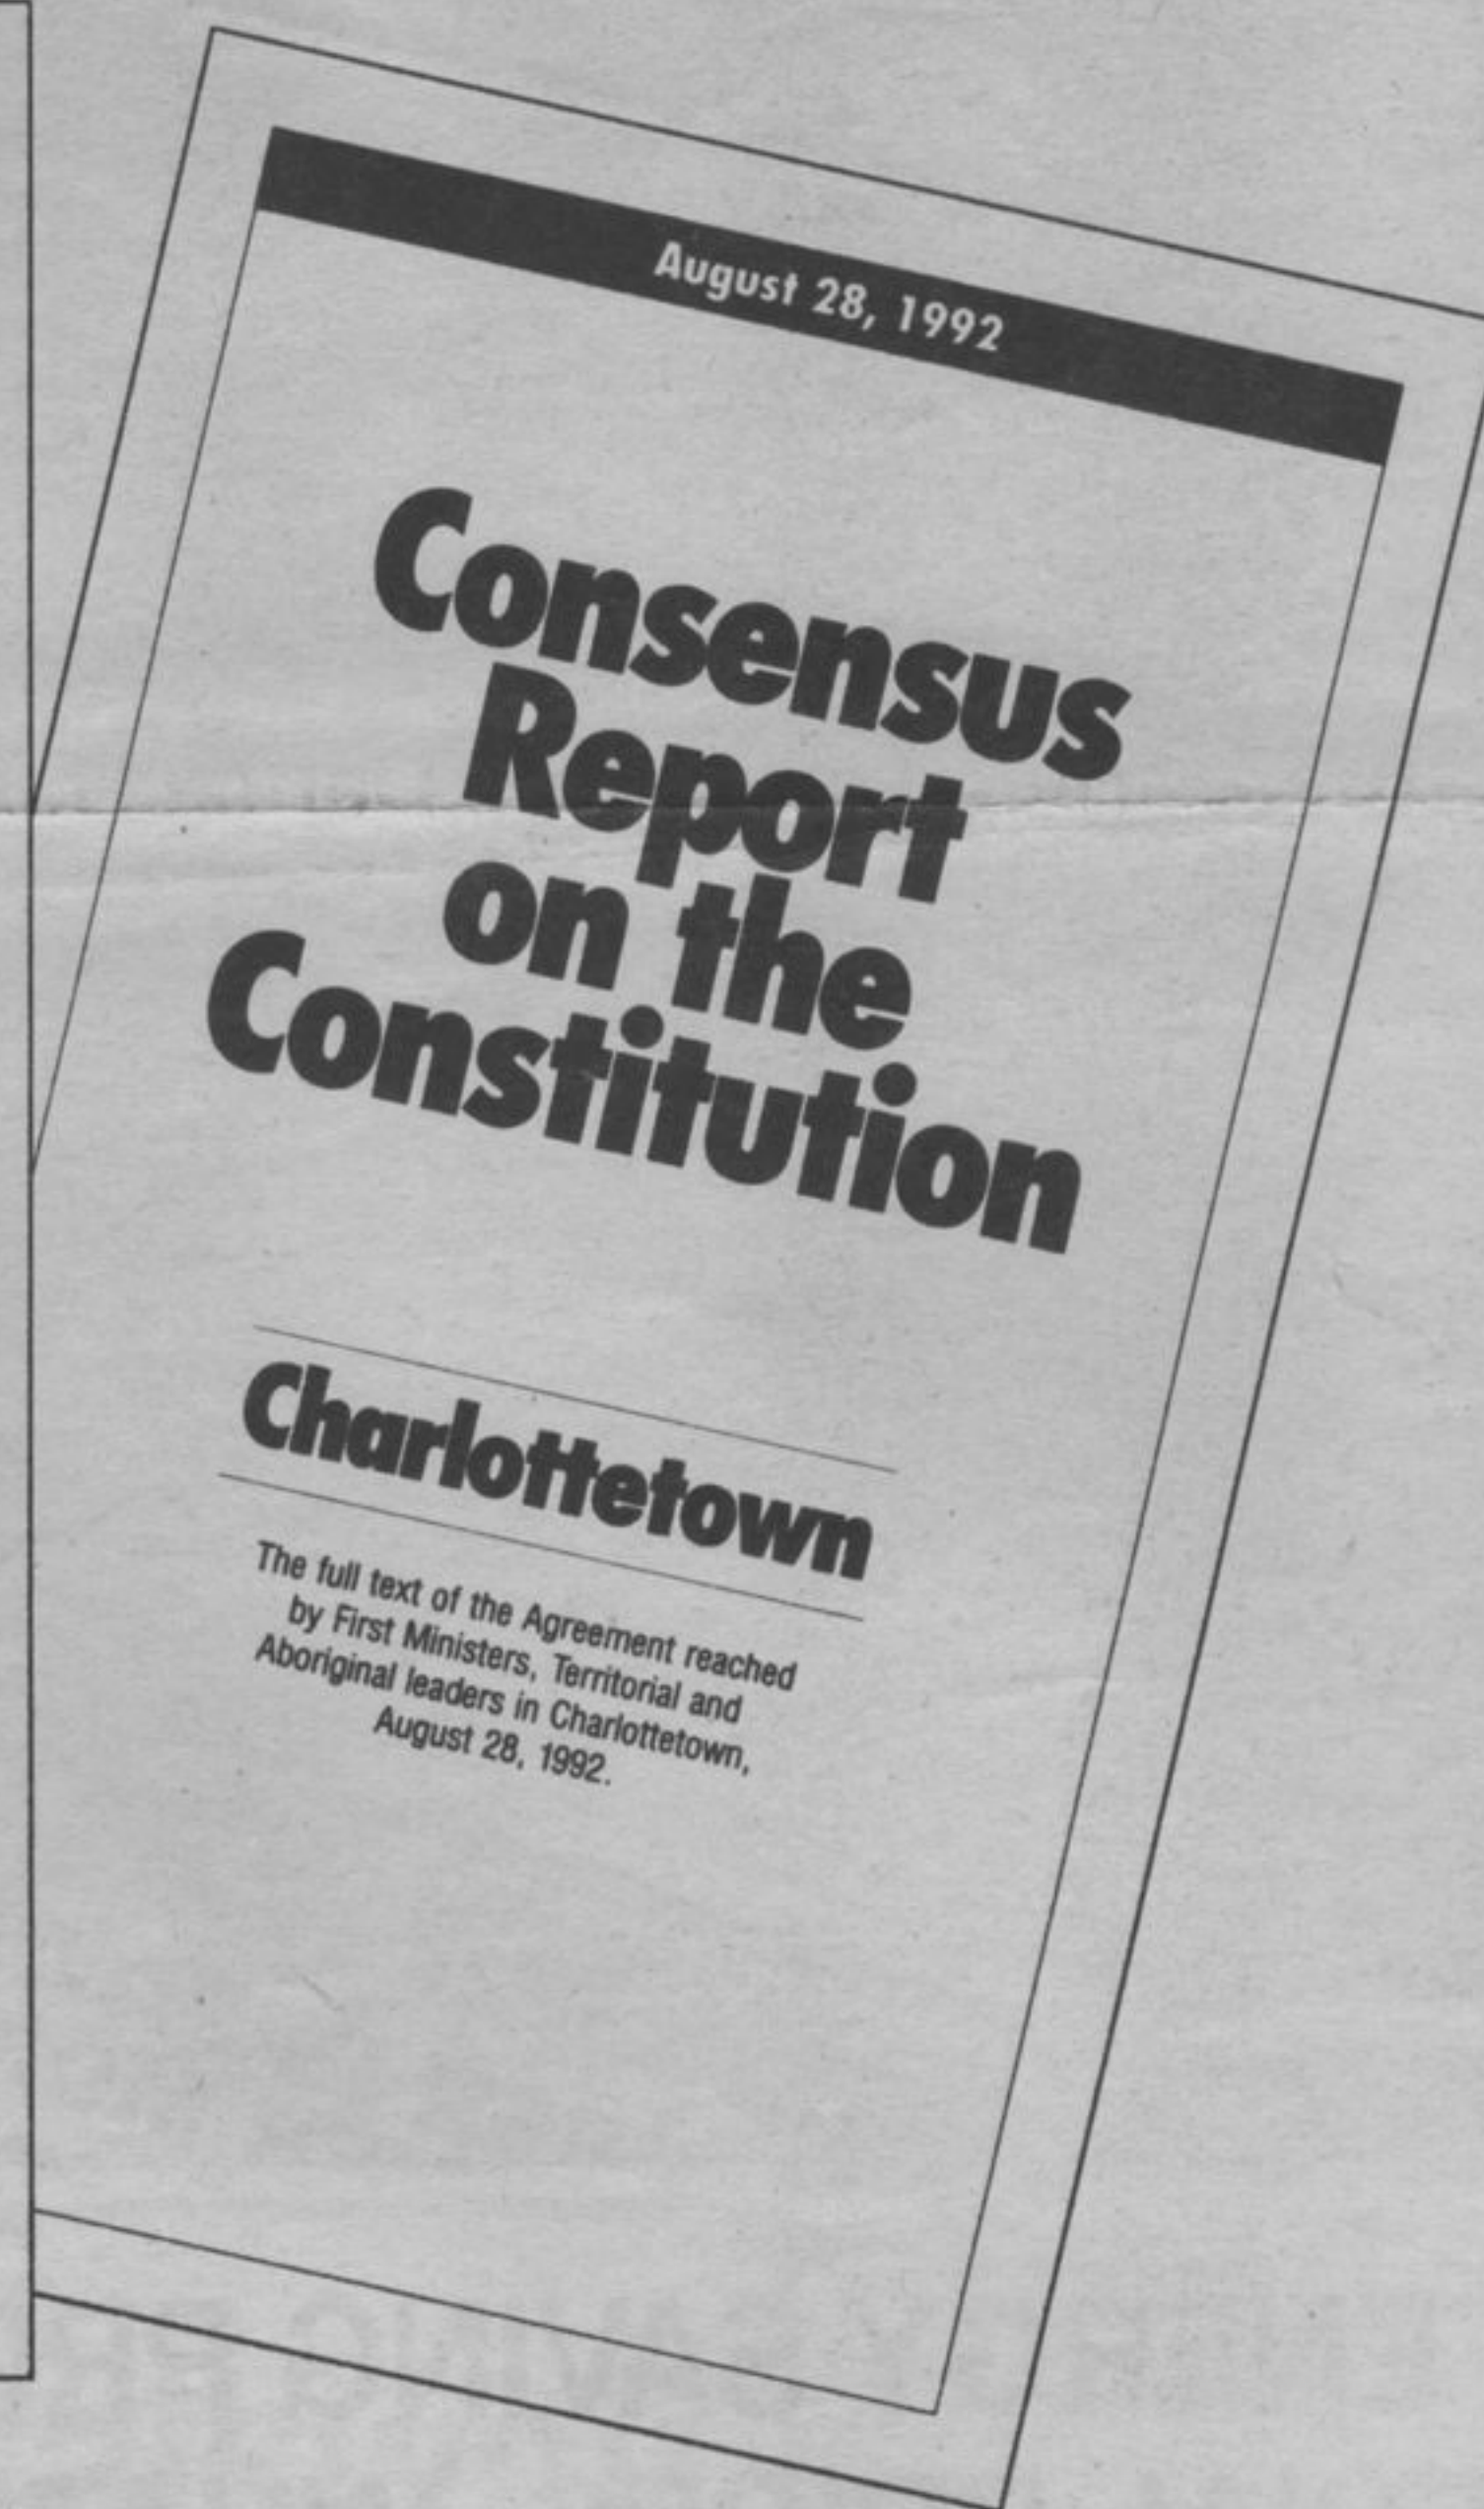

There's no denying that many good Canadians will be voting 'no' in the referendum. To suggest that they're enemies of Canada is offensive and incorrect. The accord is flawed in certain areas, and some people find it too flawed to support. But it's the height of political dishonesty to try and convince people that a 'no' vote will bring an end constitutional wrangling.
