

New chief of medical staff at McCausland

Dr. David Hurst has been named as the new Chief of Medical Staff at the McCausland. Hurst replaces Dr. Wilkes, whose three-year term expired. According to the hospital's bylaws, the position must be rotated at the end of each three-year term. The hospital board appoints the chief on a recommendation from the medical staff.

In other hospital news, the medical staff reelected Dr. Farouk Rohani President of the Medical Staff Sept. 9.

Plan player tryouts

The key to effective and successful player tryouts is advance planning and organization.

Before you can design your tryouts, you must answer the following questions: how many players will participate? How much ice time is available? How many players will you keep after each cut.

Decide what criteria you will use to evaluate players, and base them on the qualities you are looking for. Some general categories you might use include individual skills, team tactics, and mental, physical and emotional qualities.

Next, design your tryout sessions to evaluate players on these criteria. Methods such as specific skill drills, skill testing and competitive drills allow you to assess players on an individual and head-to-head basis. The best way to evaluate players' overall abilities is during organized scrimmages and exhibition games.

Here are some hints to running smooth tryouts:

- * inform players of tryout details well in advance.

- * collaborate with your assistant coaches and manager to cover all tasks.

- * explain selection process to players before tryouts.

When releasing players, don't read the names of cuts or post lists. Speak with each player individually, inviting questions and offering feedback. Don't make future promises to players: direct them to other teams, and thank them for their effort.

It is important to remember that your treatment of players should reflect your desire to place them on teams where they will benefit most, rather than making it a negative experience that could turn them away from hockey.
