

Grandmother venturing for life

Therese Weiler speaks at Holy Angels Church in Schreiber.

Therese Weiler says she is walking across Canada to raise awareness "of the giftedness of all human life."

The grandmother from Eden-Grove, Ont., has already made it through the Maritimes and Quebec, and has spent most of this fall in Northwestern Ontario. She told an audience at Holy Angels Church in Schreiber that she decided to make the trip after a seemingly incurable foot ailment she had struggled with for years miraculously healed.

After a long period of training, Weiler set out last April from St. John's, Newfoundland, bringing her message to each community along the way.

Among other things, her message includes stressing the "sanctity of life of the unborn, the handicapped, and the elderly."

Weiler said she believes that there is a danger euthanasia will become legal in Canada.

She also gave graphic descriptions of what she said occurs in abortion clinics, and she strongly condemned well-known abortionist Dr. Henry Morgenthaler.

Weiler also talked about the warm reception she has received in many communities across Canada.

But she said that the media—and the CBC in particular—hasn't given fair coverage to her walk, mainly because of her pro-life message.

She said she had no scheduled date for finishing her trip, preferring instead to take things day by day.
