Hope for migraine sufferers

Some say it's a spike in your head, others say it's a hot piker in your eye. Every movement makes it throb more. It's called a migraine.

While the precise cause of migraine has not yet been pinpointed, promising strides have been made in the last decade. Migraine takes many forms.

A new medication, Imitrex, is a breakthrough that offers relief from migraine's debilitating symptoms and agonizing pain. Worldwide testing has shown it to be very safe.

"I expect many of my patients will lead far more normal lives because of Imitrex. They won't cancel social engagements, miss work or lose out on family activities because they can't function," says Dr. Robert Nelson, a neurologist affiliated with the Ottawa General Hospital. "This is the first medication to offer such a high level of effectiveness, safety and rapid relief for migraines."
