Region gets a present from computer firm

Regional council has received, with some glee, an early Christmas present from the firm it leases its word processing equipment from.

MICOM, the firm involved, said it would sell the equipment currently in place at the region for $30,488.81 provided the amount was paid in full prior to Dec. 25.

Meanwhile the region, seeing the lease was about to end in two months, had decided to set aside $40,000 to look at replacement equipment.
The deal with MICOM means Halton saved about $10,000.

Roly In Order

Burlington Mayor Roly Bird says even he will keep himself in order now that regional council has accepted Mr. Bird's complaints about delegations and put them into the Procedure Bylaw.

Mr. Bird told regional administration and finance committee he had had enough of long-winded delegations and the interplay of words between the delegations and councillors.

He said the way for things to be is for a delegation to say their piece and then sit down and wait for a decision by council, not debate it with councillors.
When this was agreed, Mr. Bird said chairman Peter Pomeroy would never hear a peep out of him again about delegations.

No Porn Action

Regional councillors passed without comment a resolution from the City of York calling for a ban on violent pornography, particularly porn involving children.

Another item which went through with little comment was a call from the City of Toronto respecting deregulation of the telecommunications industry.

Onerous Duty

Regional councillor Jim Grieve, formerly chairman of the region's art selection committee is now the chairman of the art selection and landscaping committee.
Calling it "another onerous task thrust upon me," Mr. Grieve has turned in his report for 1984.

In it he sets out plans for the art committee to host a three-week display of works by regional employees.

And the landscaping committee has brought in plans previously announced to add shrubs at regional headquarters, fill in the moat, and erect a more attractive sign on Highway 25.

Committee named

Halton's solid waste management committee has been struck for 1985.

Milton councillors Bill Johnson will be a member as will Ann Mulvale of Oakville; Walter Mulkewich of Burlington; and Russ Miller of Halton Hills. Regional chairman, Peter Pomeroy is also a member.

Crown attorneys facing several problems, 2 say

By GORD KOLLE
Ontario's crown attorneys are resigning because of poor pay, overwork and little or no recognition. If the problems continue, victims of crime will suffer the consequences in court, according to two Halton crown attorneys.

Crown attorneys are the province's civil and criminal prosecutors. They counsel victims of crime and prepare cases against those accused of committing them.

Their clearance record is so good, the Ontario Crown Attorney Association says the province's 250 full-time crown attorneys win 95 per cent of their cases annually.

But 15 seasoned prosecutors have resigned in the past year because private practice pays more money, according to Halton's Chief Crown Attorney, Jim Treleaven.

"The primary factor is the pay level," he says. "Private practice is attracting crown attorneys and it is having a snowball effect. After working for the government and seeing your friends from law school earn twice as much in private practice, the temptation is too great."

So far, Halton Region has escaped the drain of crown attorneys.
Treleaven says this is partly because he has carefully picked his staff: men who are dedicated to the job over money considerations.

"But that doesn't mean it won't happen here," he adds.
The average salary for an assistant crown attorney is $40,000 a year. However prosecutors can work up to 40 hours a week overtime with no pay meaning the wage comes to about $10 per hour, less than that of a full-time bus driver.

"And any crown not doing 10-12 weeks of overtime a year is not doing his job," says Treleaven. "And they're being paid the same wage they were 10 years ago, so they're not working just for the money."

The pay problem has been compounded by the salary limits placed on government employees by the Inflation Restraint Act. Crown Attorneys suffer more than other civil servants says Mr. Treleaven, because they are not allowed to strike, form a union or support their favourite political party.

"You give up those rights when you become a crown," explains Mr. Treleaven. "It's part of the job requirements."

Mr. Treleaven says the "excellent" working relationship his staff enjoys with the Halton Regional Police is also a reason there have been no resignations in Halton.

The same cannot be said for Toronto area crown attorneys, says Paul Culver, president of the Ontario Crown Attorney Association.
There are four times that number in any major city in the United States, comparable with Toronto, he says.

The courts at Toronto's Old City Hall are the busiest in the country. But there are only two secretaries for the 30 crown attorneys who work there, says Mr. Culver. "It's ridiculous," he says.

"In the past six months six crown attorneys left the metro courts for private practices," he says. "They're tired of sharing a small desk with another lawyer and trying to have a personal conversation with a rape victim or a victim of child abuse."

About three per cent of the province's budget is spent on the administration of justice, he adds, including fees for judges, prison systems and police forces.
"You begin to reach salary ceilings within the system and soon incentive becomes the job itself," he says. "So we've become poor

Regional briefs

Full-time Inspector

Council has decided to hire a full-time waste disposal inspector.
This is a new position and the job description will include keeping an eye of what is coming into Halton's landfill sites and sludge storage lagoons.

Halton Hills Mayor Russ Miller said to regional council that he thought Halton should not create a new position but should look for someone inside the region to do the job.

Emergency System

The 911 telephone emergency system will go into place in Halton on Nov. 15, 1985.

Regional councillors approved without comment implementation of the system would allow most Halton residents to summon police, fire or medical support teams. There are some minor details yet to be established and this will be done by the region's Implementation Task Force.

Oil Collection

As soon as March of next year Halton will get into the waste oil collection business.

Regional council has approved its Waste Oil Collection Program and it will be advertised through Halton-area media and in utility bills. The advertising would cost about $1,500.
More details on the program are expected to be announced with the program starts.

Asphalt Curb

Halton will pay $1,200 to build an asphalt curb along Derry Rd. at Walkers Line.

The curb is part of a drainage agreement between Halton and the owners of the "Greenfield Property".
The asphalt curb will run about 80 metres south on Walkers Line from Derry Rd.

EEAC Appointment

Halton Hills regional councillor Jake Kuiken has been appointed Halton Region council representative to the Halton Ecological and Environmental Advisory Committee (EEAC).
The appointment runs until Nov. 30, 1985.

ly paid but dedicated lawyers for the government and I'm afraid many of us just can't handle it any more.

Biggest Problem

The biggest problem then becomes the drain of good, experienced crown attorneys. According to Mr. Culver, it takes about three years to train a young lawyer in the art of prosecution, while Mr. Treleaven says a prosecutor "starts knowing his job" after five years.

"When experienced crown attorneys leave, their places get filled with junior, inexperienced prosecutors," he says. "Though we can't back it up with figures, I'm sure we're beginning to lose a lot more cases because of inexperienced crown attorneys."

The problem is compounded by crown-attorney-defence lawyers, he adds. "The defence lawyer who's been a crown is smarter because he knows all the holes in the prosecution's case. He also has the benefit of research libraries made possible to defence lawyers by legal aid funds, which are denied to crown attorneys."

Crown attorneys are currently handling five times the caseload they worked in 1972, says Mr. Treleaven. "With only a two-and-a-half per cent increase in the number of staff, I could use another crown in Halton. As chief crown I'm already spending too much time in court and not enough at my paper work."

Assistant Halton Crown Attorney Bryan Calhoun laments his inability to spend more time counselling victims.
"I'd like to sit down with the victim. But where do I find the time," he asks. "There's too much court time and not enough staff."

Community View

And since the victims of crime come from the community Calhoun believes the problem should be looked at by the community as much as the government.

"The real tragedy in the years I've been a crown attorney is that I've yet to meet someone who has been a victim that doesn't feel the trauma of being criminalized is not one of the most drastically important things that ever occurred to them in their lives," says Mr. Calhoun.

"But the funding given to the administration of justice doesn't reflect the importance placed on the rights of crime victims."

Mr. Calhoun says he believes that if there are insufficient facilities for crown attorneys because of a lack of funding, it is up to the community to tell their politicians to do something about it.

"How important is it to the individual in our community to have safety of himself, his friends as well as his property protected?" he asks. "There is no crime rate without the prosecution and the police. You want to get rid of the crime rate, get rid of us and the police. But that doesn't solve the problems."

Insufficient facilities, meagre support staff and erosion of morale are contributing to a general deterioration of the justice system, says Treleaven.

Crumbling

"The concept of the justice system, as we know it, is crumbling," he says. "The government seems to be willing to let us leave and replace us with less experienced people. It doesn't seem to care."

With a two-year backlog of cases, witnesses begin to lose memory and cases are thrown out, says Mr. Calhoun. There are nine courts and bail hearings every day in Halton and there are four crown attorneys to handle the load.
