Art on display at Joshua Creek

Two Toronto artists are showing their sculpture and painting works in a show at the Joshua Creek Heritage Art Centre.

Sculptor Naomi Freudmann is showing alabaster, bronze and raku pottery pieces, while painter Tamar Ehrlich shows her Travelog work, which documents her trips to many countries.

The exhibit, titled In Harmony, opened Aug. 15, and goes on until Sept. 12

Freudmann was born in Tel Aviv, and studied painting from the early 1950s, in various countries, until her focus switched to raku and sculpture in the 70s while living in Toronto.

Ehrlich was born in Poland and she survived the Holocaust by hiding with her parents. She was educated in Germany, Israel and France in languages and worked as a translator until she developed an interest in art. She studied various art mediums until she settled into painting.

The art centre is located at 1086 Burnhamthorpe Rd. E. Gallery hours are Tuesday to Sunday 1-4 p.m. Visit www.joshuacreekarts.com.
