I was suddenly awakened the other day from the even tenor of life by a notice of an action for libel from Detective Wasson, whose bearing in the Kickapoo case here I criticised about a month ago. Upon consulting with those who are more conversant with the administration of law than I am I find that they consider that Mr. Wasson's conduct was perfectly proper for one who has to resort to all sorts of devises to apprehend law-breakers. I am glad to find I was wrong and that Detective wasson is blameless. and I therefore withdraw all my strictures upon his conduct. I trust there may be no further hard feelings between us, as I only wrote what seemed to me to be a fair criticism of both Wasson and and Lexington, the defendant. My object is to report things fairly, and if I fail in judgment. (We may add that the policy of the CHRONICLE is to assist all public officials who are charged with the enforcement of law, and had we seen Mr. Nott's paragraph about Detective Wasson before publication we should nave held it over for further inquiry. When there is so much correspondence one eye cannot
