Our esteemed cotem., the Vindicator, this week publishes a letter signed "Thos COUANT," and in the double heading of the letter says the letter is from "Thos. COUANT." We presume the epistle is from Hon. Thos. Conant, and we can account for the use of the u instead of the n in spelling in the United States on the same date, Nov his name by no other theory except that the gentleman has changed the spelling of his name this time. Some years ago he traced with C. Columbus in the Plymouth Rock and landed on the Mayflower, and when he found that Sir Roger pronounced his name with emphasis on the "Con." instead of the "Co." he adopted the old style because it was hard to pronounce. Now Mr. Conant is in the Rossland mines, and has probably found some reason for changing his name to "Couant" so that it cannot be pronounced at all. We cannot account for its being thus spelled in every instance in this week's is sue of our cotem. unless a change in the

We received on Tuesday a letter from an It is understood that the economical ad- structing us to pitch into a man of honorable anonymous source asking, or rather inbusiness career and high standing in the how his own conduct meets, with public approval, but the fact that he withholds his name causes us to hesitate and suspect. If a good man, or at least one who professes Richard Reynolds, who twenty years ago or tries to be good, errs once he is set upon business of a newspaper is to publish honest news and to do as much good as it can This is our object, and, if occasionally we write a little nonsense to amuse people those who look under the crust of it will find a moral in every instance. Lessons may be imparted in the shape of either fun or criticism, but we do no stabbing under the fifth rib. A man who would urge us to lambaste a neighbor and neglect to sign his name to the letter must think very little of himself and less of us, for we do not give out names even if the writer be flagrantly wrong. We are glad to have pointers or advice, but an honest adviser will make himself known to trusted with his name, it is time he sought
