The trouble was this: Mr. Middleton was in love with two women instead of one, and he positively could not decide He loved them both with all heart, and he was certain that each of them was only waiting for him to make his declaration in due form to tell him how much she loved him in return.

The first young woman at whose shrine he worshipped was Dora Paine, a sprightly little brunnette, with charming manners, a beautiful face and unusual in-house, and her ready attendant at places of social amusement. He felt that he must become either less or more at once. His manly instincts demanded that he should delay the matter no longer.

But there was Agnes Moulton. During the preceding winter an old friend of match. his mother had visiting her a young orphan girl by that name.

Agnes was in great sorrow and shunned all gay society. Mrs Grytan begged him to come often to help her cheer her vis itor, and this cheering process had led to his second infatuation. He had corresponded with Agnes ever since she went back to her brother's home, and he was sure from the tone of her letters that she returned his affection.

What was he to do? He puzzled over the relative merits of blonde and brunette, weighed in the balance the numerous virtues of each, tried every possible and impossible plan for finding out one's own mind-all to no purpose. He was too thoroughly ashamed of himself to take any one into his confidence. Mrs Grytan was his nearest matronly friend, but she stood in too intimate relations with Agnes to be considered for a moment. If it were any other matter, he would go to Josephine, but he could never own himself such a fool to her.

He had known Josephine Ferris all his life. Only a year his junior, she seemed quite passe compared to the girl to whom he paid his addresses nowadays. He was 35 now, and he remembered with what impatience he had waited for the day he attained his majority, that he might lay his fortune at her feet in truly heroic fashion.

She was 20 then, and she laughed at him for a silly boy. Their friendship Josephine had gone on teasing and lec Middleton did nothing else for her turing him just as she had done since they were babies. In later years their friendship had grown to be a very pleas.

So he hid his trouble and brooded over it. He spent evenings at the Paine's, cessful. vowing to decide before he went home He came home more deeply in love with Dora than ever, to find a letter from Agnes had still all its old power over him. He was growing thin. Where was this matter to end?

One night at the club he said to a brother member, "Hal, what do you do when you can't decide between two apparently equally good courses of action ?"

"Toss up. Settle things every time, feeble brain over decisions that won't decide. Here you are, Gus. Heads or tails ? "

Hal threw up the coin. He watched the result eagerly. "Tails!" exclaimed Hal, and tails it

No one was at home at the Paines' Stupid of him to forget that they left town that day to attend a wedding and he sees to it that they are housed and went around to Josephine's and spent the rest of the evening. The next morning came a letter from injury. Agnes, and, joy of joys! she wrote him that she was engaged to be married! "Bless that cent!" he exclaimed ecstatically. "This makes all clear sailing. Dora will be home to-morrow, and I'll be The care of tools is an important factor Thursday night is the Beldon ball. I'll settle matters there."

Thursday night came. Dora was be witchingly attired in a floating mass of pale yellow ganze which made her look like an escaped sunbeam. Toward the close of the evening he managed to get her away from the circle of admirers into tion to meet with a decided refusal.

A CITIZEN'S STORY

Two are Enough. He Feels Happier.

DID NOT NEED THREE.

Mr. James N. Davis, of 15 Wellington st., St. Thomas, speaks of an event of late occurrence, which should be of interest to many of our citizens. Mr. Davis, in conversation with our representative, said:

"Doan's Kidney Pills are the best kidney remedy I ever heard of. They have removed the distressing kidney trouble with which I was afflicted, and made a stronger, happier man of me. For some years I have been troubled with severe pains across the lower part of the back. The urine was dark in color and caused me a great deal of annoyance, being compelled to get up a number of times during the night. I was also a great sufferer from severe cramps in my legs, which became so painful that I had to get out of bed and rub them with liniment in order to get even momentary ease. had a great deal of sick headache; was troubled with weakness of the eyes and felt tired, weak and worn out. Walking distressed me because of the pain and general weakness from which I suffered. I got three boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills from Mr. E. C. Harvey at his drug store, and have not taken the third box because there was no necessity to do so. The two boxes have had such a surprising effect for good that I did not need the third. Yes, sir, I take pleasure in telling what they have done for me because of the health that I now enjoy through their use. All my difficulties have vanished; I have no pain in the back; no sick headache; my eyes do not trouble me; I have had no cramps since I began taking the pills; sleep well, and the tired, played-out feeling has all gone. believe all these troubles were caused simply from kidney trouble. You may say that I know Doan's Kidney Pills to be a speedy and wonderful specific for kidney and urinary difficulties, and I most strongly recommend their use to anyone afflicted as I was.
