Feed Well-Bred Hogs.

It is a question in the minds of a good many whether pedigree or individual merit should be first considered in raising pigs for the market. We would venture to say that the first named should receive the greatest attention, for the reason that it is pedigree which gives prepotency to the type, and consequently a breed that can be relied upon to produce certain results under certain conditions. It is market comes on that the value of pedigree shows up. Nondescript animals in every respect prove unsatisfactory. For economy in producing pork there is nothing that tells like established pedigree. But while recognizing the great importance of pedigree, the merit of individual animals must not be overlooked. Amongst all pedigree stock there are weeds which must be eliminated, and a strange fact is that the most showy animals do not always produce the best stock of their kind. Therefore, when purchasing a boar it is known to produce entirely satisfactory progeny, that animal should be kept as long as possible for breeding purposes; and not less important than the boar is the brood sow, which should also be a carefully selected animal.—Ad. vocate.

...the St. Lawrence River in recent years. The beach at many points presents a curious and sometimes beautiful appearance, showing the action of the water in the past, and giving the shore a peculiar ragged better place than Troutburg for making comparisons. Out at West Point the water has receded nearly a quarter of a mile. Here the beach is thickly strewn with fine building stone awaiting some enterprising quarryman. In front of the Pleasant View House there is a little pier at which anglers usually sit and fish. Now there is not a drop of water within many feet of it. In front of the Ontario House there is a pier, beside which a steamboat sank a few years ago during a storm. Now only a few feet of the outer end of the pier is standing in about two feet of water. Fourteen years ago the late Ex-Sheriff Campbell of Rochester purchased the Bush House property and built a pier far out into the lake. Subsequent storms carried it all away, excepting one big crib, which the ice shoved off below the surface, and it is usually submerged; now it looms up about five feet above the water.

A half mile east, at the Devil's Nose, which is the highest headland on the southern shore, there is a chain of rocks and conglomerates extending far out into the lake. Usually they are submerged, but now pedestrians pass all over and around them. Dry shod. A few years ago Lanlord Stour, while fishing off this point, had his anchor caught among these rocks, and had to abandon it. A few days ago his little son Lyell, while wandering among the rocks, discovered it in a few inches of water and secured it. A few days ago Misses Nellie Austin, Emma Bates and Mattie Elliott, of Morton, drove with a horse and carriage along the beach from the Spring Brook marsh west of Troutburg, a distance of two miles passing along the base of the Devil's Nose, right where small steamers and other small craft can usually go. At one point while passing this cliff, they were apparently balked by a chain of huge boulders, which were too close together for their carriage to pass, but they pluckily unhitched the horse, and lifting the vehicle over, re hitched and proceeded. Their trip is a feat never performed before by a feminine, and they are justly elated. A few years ago it was accomplished by Ed. Gavin, the veteran blacksmith of Shay's Corners, and a companion, but their temerity nearly cost them the lives of themselves and horse, all of them escaping only by their ability as swimmers.

What Wears the Brain.
The brain is capable of a great deal of continuous labor in so far as its exercise is that of mere construction—in other words, so long as the work it does is original. For in that way the brain is working freely, in full accord with its own fancy, as it were, and therefore is not likely to tire soon. Take as a corresponding illustration the use of the voice. So long as it is natural, and not forced by artificialities, it may be called upon for hours together, simply because it is used naturally. Original work of the brain is natural work, and the parallel holds true here. When, however, one is reproducing acquired knowledge, the brain is put to an extra strain, having not merely to be exercised in constructive work, which is its ordinary function, but also having to traverse through the memory, and make a selection of the knowledge stored in the brain.

Stand close to a high fence and try to leap over. You fail. Walk back a few steps, get a good start. The fence is easily cleared. Neglect your cough, never mind your loss in weight, and when consumption faces you, your strength may not be sufficient to carry you over the danger-line. If you could only go back a few weeks and make a good start, you might win.
