The happy couple left on the afternoon train for their future home in Manitoba. The best wishes of the CHRONICLE follow them.

Stranded. The French gypsies who were camped out at Young's woods last fall are now stranded just outside the limits of the city of London. They were half starved and almost naked and could not move on as their horses had either been stolen or had strayed away. Their only protection from the bitter cold weather is their rude camps consisting of pieces of matting thrown over frames. Public sympathy was aroused and piles of clothing and plenty of food was contributed.

Great interest was taken in the colony when it was learned that one of the women had given birth to a child, the little one being ushered into the world when the mercury was five below zero. The Gross-Jackson Case. Came up for hearing on Tuesday night. Only the defendant's evidence was taken. Gross stated that on the morning after the municipal election he was on Pringle's corner in conversation with some other men when Albert Jackson came down street. Albert Jackson made some remark, but he (Gross) did not hear what was said, having started for his store. Albert called again and asked what had been said the night before. Gross remarked that he was not in conversation with Mr. Jackson, and proceeded up street, when he noticed Thos. Jackson running toward him, pulling up his sleeves. Thomas made a pass at Gross, who ran towards his store. He slipped into the store and Jackson slipped by. The door has neither bolt, latch or any other fastener but a large lock. The door when not locked is held shut by an air spring. Gross ran behehind the counter to the place where the key is usually hung. The key was not in its place. Close by lay a package of knives with the sample laying on top. Nothing else being handy he grabbed this and ran to the end of the counter. Albert Jackson was at the door. Gross told Jackson not to dare to come in. An interchange of epithets took place. Albert opened the door and placed his foot inside Gross stepped forward, that the handle of the door in his hand and but his foot against the door and again caltioned Jackson not to come in. Gross was standing behind the stile of the door and made a jab at Jackson not intending to hit him but to frighten him away, and did not know that he had stabbed Jackson until Jackson pushed open the door and standing inside said, "You have stabled me." The case was adjourned until Saturday night, Feb. 60 Gross gave bail, his had decided not to call any witnesses for the defence until the trial of the case before the higher court
