For the present the last of the Gross-Jackson cases was heard on Thursday night last. when some further evidence in the assault case against T G Jackson was heard. Mr. Jackson testified that he heard Gross talking about him on the morning of Jan. 5th as he was driving past Pringle's store. He understood Gross to say "damned thief." This is the intense provocation which he gives as an excuse for the assault. Unimportant testimony was taken from F. J. Jones, and Mr. Dow moved for sentence, and to have Jackson placed under bonds to keep the peace This the magistrate appeared disinclined to do, as he expressed the opinion that there was no farther cause to apprehend assault from Jackson. The case stands adjourned in that shape, and will continue to stand ad journed until the matter comes up at the jury sittings of the high court of justice.

For many a day our Whitby people had been looking for Feb. 12th, to see the return match between Whitby and Port Hope, and 700 spectators gathered from far and near to see the struggle at the rink on Friday night last. So confident were the Port Hopers that they hired a car and came up here with fifty rooters to sing O-n-t-a-r-i-o, which is the name of their club. Our defeat by 6-1 at Port Hope made people dubious of Whitby's ability to down the eastern club, but the best informed Whitby sports were quite conbounced to the ceiling, then fell among fident of victory. Such a scene as the rink presented at 9 o'clock one would hardly ex pect to see again in a lifetime. Every brace and cross-timber in the upper part of the rink was alive with rooters for either one side or the other. The visiting club was not ready to play until o 15, and by that time many who had waited two hours were very anxious. At last amid seething excitement Dominion parliament and the United States where Smith was to hit the gallery, and it is "There they go!" shouted hundreds of voices, and it was like the hoise of starting a race for the Queen's plate. They were off truly, and at a gait which meant death or THURSDAY, victory, one would imagine. It was very fast, but still anybody who had eyes could see which club was in the better winning form from the start.
