A farmer who lives a few miles to the north west from here, was driving home from town Saturday evening with his team and wagon As the horses were jogging along, and the farmer viewing the WINDMILLS landscape o'er he suddenly tumbled out of the wagon. When the farmer got onto his feet the horses were some distance away, although they had slowed up into a walk. As the farmer could not run he could not catch up, so he did the next best thing and shouted "whoa " He could do it with a vengeance; help came soon; a young man stopped the horses and the farmer got in and went on his way, we hope, a more sober and wiser man.

Last Friday being a holiday our town cyclers were out in full force and were so pleased with their day's enjoyment that they forgot that there was a town by law prohibiting bicycle riders from riding on the sidewalks. Every one-including two voung ladies-acknowledged the charge and were fined $1 each and costs. transaction, first, to the person whom they was no trial. I think that if the party who was the means of giving the names to the chief constable had warned the bicyclists first and then if they violated the law they deserve to be fined; in the matter of costs, while the magistrate had the right to charge the amount he did, it would have left a better feeling had the costs not been quite so much. I am told from this time out bicycle riders who will persist in riding on the sidewalks will receive no quarter from the law, but must take their fine and costs with the best grace possible.
