Evidently Mr. Smith spoke much posed. Evidently Mr. Smith spoke much stirring at daybreak, getting ready for the more bluntly than was in good taste, as is very often the case at political meetings. Politicians are like newspaper publishers: they must not say everything that comes to their minds. Besides the danger of the jury disagreeing, there was the prospect of stir-ring up much bitter feeling which would last for a long time. People lose their heads over politics badly enough, dear knows, without being inflamed by bitter law scrapes. That each party to the cause was satisfied to pay his own costs, shows how willing both were to withdraw the case.
