How to Wean a Calf.

To give an easy mode of weaning calf. There is no difficulty when the calf is young. Sometimes we allow such a calf to draw the milk from the cow once and give the calf your submerged finger Urinary Organs, to suck. Do not be in a hurry; the young one will not perish if it does not drink for six hours after birth. Generally the calf will smell and taste the milk and suck the finger. Withdraw the hand gradually, and after two or three times it will drink without the finger. It requires a good stock of patience, because, generally, the calf objects to put down its head, while nature intended it should hold its head up to get at the teat. The older the calf is when weaned-that is, if it has drawn its rations from the dam direct, the harder it will be to wean, unless old enough to eat grass or PILLS. hay. Such a calf should be allowed to fast half a day; then it should be given a thimbleful of the salt, when it will drink the more readily. Follow up the hints given above, and above all in each case separate dam and calf and let them not will learn to chew it, get thirsty and then drink. Handle the animal as frequently as possible and teach it that you are not an enemy but a friend.

That's the whole secret in a word. We can cure no disease unless we can keep up the patient's strength. And there's only one way to do that-feed him. But if the system refuses food? Then use SCOTT'S EMULSION of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites.
