limit of Simplified or 'streamlined' Procedure from $50,000 to $100,000

- Limiting the pre-trial examination for discovery process where parties are questioned about their case to one day unless the parties

agree or the court orders an extension

- Creating a general principle of "proportionality" in the Rules of Civil Procedure so the time and expense of each case reflects what is at stake.

New Standards for Public Sector When Serving Disabled Clients

As of January 1, public sector organizations such as municipal governments, hospitals and schools must comply with new customer service standards for clients with disabilities. These requirements also cover provincial ministries as well as agencies of the Ontario government.

Customer service requirements include: training staff regarding the needs of customers with disabilities, communicating with a person in a manner that takes into account his or her disability; and permitting clients to bring service animals such as guide dogs into their premises. Ontario's private sector will be asked to meet the same customer service standards as the public sector by 2012.

About 1.85 million people (Or one in seven Ontario residents.) have a disability. As the population ages, the number will rise to one in five Ontarians by 2020. Further information is available online at www.AccessON.ca

Keeping Electronics and Batteries from Landfill

If you're starting 2010 with a new computer, television, or other electronic device, don't forget to recycle your old electronics and batteries. It is estimated that Ontario households and businesses generate about 85,000 tonnes of old or obsolete computers, televisions, copiers, phones, and stereos each year. Recycling and reuse programs are in place for waste electronics, and there are diversion programs for household hazardous waste, such as batteries. The web site www.dowhatyoucan.ca will direct you to the nearest location to drop off these products for recycling or reuse. This site also has information on safely disposing of household hazardous materials such as leftover paint.
