

CONSERVATION FARM

Murray said the GPS AutoSteer includes a touch-screen activated monitor for the tractor's cab, which shows where the satellites are positioned, "so you can work under optimal conditions."

It also comes with a memory card that can be loaded from a personal computer, so co-ordinates and land information can be reused from year-to-year.

Along with Tiessen's farm, HJV Precision has recently installed the software in two other local areas - Ederington's Fertilizer in Blytheswood, Ont. and Dennis Driedger's farm, northwest of Wheatley.

Murray said the company is hoping to install more systems in the future.

"We'd like to set up a network of towers so any grower can use it."

The GPS technology was the main focus of the ESCIA's tour.

Secretary and treasurer Tim Impens says the technology is beginning to be used by more and more farmers because of its advantages in accuracy and repeatability in tending to crops. "It guides you right through so you don't overlap or double-seed," Impens said. "The bottom line is precision. It helps prevent mistakes that can happen in farming."
