

quantity last fall, as an experiment, not sufficient to test its quality for the manufacture of flour. Should it, however, prove equal to the wheat grown in this section in this respect, the yield would be a great inducement for our farmers to introduce it into this country.—Berlin Telegraph.

BRYANT AND STRATTON'S CHAIN OF MERCANTILE COLLEGES.—The interests of industry, trade and commerce are universal. Everywhere they are the sources of wealth, and the means which bring within our reach objects which contribute to enjoyment, and render life more desirable. Every educational facility prepares for more immediate usefulness, and success in the legitimate avocations of business life is of incalculable value. Prominent among these are the advantages afforded by Messrs. Bryant & Stratton's chain of Colleges, located in seven of the leading cities of the country. The young man who aspires, as he should, to honorable and permanent success, will do himself great injustice by neglecting to avail himself of the advantage to be derived from a thorough preparation for the active pursuits of life which he can nowhere so well obtain as in these most excellent institutions.
