I'll Think no more of Thee.

Thy smiles are bright as sunbeams : But ah! as sunbeams fall Alike on all the sons of men. So beam thy smiles on all Thou hast no brightest smiles for me-I'll think no more of thee,

For though thon art as lovely As the first day we met, I would that day had never daw'd, Or that I might forget I'll hush the voice of Memory, And think no more of thee.

Thy love was once my load-star, My farthest goal of bliss-I look'd not for another world. My Eden bloom'd in this :

It was a foolish phantasy-

I'll think no more of thee.

I've seen thy blushes mantle When I've praised thy nut-brown hair And hazel eyes, and fondly thought Love cull'd those blushes there-'Twas pleased self-love, not love for me! I'll think no more of thee

The thrilling glance of favour, The soft confiding tone, The pressure of thy velvet palm Are not for me alone; Others have felt their ecstacy-I'll think no more of thee.

But can I thus forget thee? Can thought be lull'd by Time? Ah no! when tides forgets to roll, The ivy-green to climb, When rivers flow not to the sea, I'll think no more of thee!
