The fourth of March is destined to be as memorable in American Listory as the Ides and Calends of March in Roman. In the early period of the Roman Republic, March was the first month of the year; it is the first in the presidential year of the American Republic. The fourth-the pridie nonas-of March, next Monday, at the induction into office of the President elect, may see the final act in the breaking up of the United States. There are men living who witnessed its establishn ent. Its duration is thus measured by the years that number the life of man. It is how 84 years since the declaration of Independence, and 73 since the adoption of the present Constitution. History will compare or contrast the men who break up with those who founded the Union-the children who could not keep with their fathers who made and entailed the inheritance, and we fear that the present blatant generation will appear at poor advantage by the side of those old men of heroic deeds.

The Republic, in its hatred of England, has Li tinck Post Office, March 2, 1861. done its best to depart from British institutions.
