The story told by Mr. Rastall, of Kinchr in any way prove a detriment to the dine, to his creditors, of his brief and wonderful career as a merchant, is certainly a very extraordinary one. It appears that he went into the pork business in the winter of 1868-69 to the extent of about $9,000. The following verses from the Hamilton He bought his pork at an average of 71 Times are too good to be lost. Anything cents per pound, and sold it at 10 cents per pork required a margin of at least 6 cents in the pound to make ends meet. For ezample, if pork was selling at 6 cents a The wit it was scanty, but whisky was pound in Toronto, the farmers would require to hand over free of charge at Kincardine And a' the McDonalds were there in a their pigs to Mr. Rastall before he could take them to Toronto and sell them and save himself. Under such circumstances we hardly think pork raising will pay in

His marked success in the pork line of business appears to have induced him to become a general merchant. He opened a When the sloth was withdrawn, then the store at Kincardine, and another at Riversdale, and succeeded in the short period of about seven months of placing to the wrongs of over $1,000 a month he professes to be utterly unable to account for.
